Shields, North, par., seaport and market town, with ry. sta., N. E. R., Northumberland, at mouth of river Tyne, opposite South Shields, in mun. bor. of Tynemouth; 39 ac., pop. 5737; P.O., T.O. North Shields has establishments for the mfr. of marine engines and chain-cables and anchors, shipbuilding yards, roperies, salt-works, and a factory for earthenware and stained glass. Fishing is largely carried on. North Shields is one of the Tyne ports. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) It has 2 lighthouses—the High Lighthouse, in front of Dockwray Square, 49 ft. high, with fixed light 123 ft. above high water and seen 16 miles; and the Low Lighthouse, near Clifford Fort, 76 ft. high, with fixed light 77 ft. above high water and seen 13 miles. The whole of Tynemouth bor. is usually called North Shields.

Shields, South, parl. and co. bor., seaport, and par., with ry. stas. (S. Shields, High Shields, and Westoe Lane), N. E. R., Durham, at mouth of river Tyne, opposite North Shields, 8 miles E. of Newcastle on Tyne; parl. bor., 2044 ac., pop. 97,263; co. bor. and par., 2399 ac., pop. 100,858; the parliamentary constituency contains 17,240 electors. North Shields (or Tynemouth) and South Shields, connected by steam ferry, are called the "twin towns." The ports, improved and deepened by dredging and the construction of piers, are capable of accommodating at their quays vessels of any size, and carry on an extensive trade, particularly in coal. South Shields is one of the Tyne ports. The harbour is protected by the South Pier (1854–1892), a breakwater of a mile in length. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The industrial establishments of South Shields comprise works for the production of steam-engine boilers and chain-cables and anchors, rope-works, sail-cloth factories, glass-works, potteries, alkali-works, and chemical works. Shipbuilding has declined. The chief architectural feature is a large market square, in the centre of which is a colonnaded building containing the town hall. The Marine Parks, recreation grounds, are divided by the Pier Parade. The beach is over a mile in extent, and attracts many visitors. South Shields is supposed to have been a Roman station, and to take its name from the fishers' huts (or shiels) anciently on its site. In the 13th century North Shields and South Shields had risen to sufficient importance, as ports, to excite the jealousy of Newcastle. At the close of the 15th century South Shields became famous for salt-works, towards the close of the 17th century for glass-works, and in the 18th century for chemical works; but so late as 1750 it was little more than a village. Since that date its prosperity has been rapid and steady. It was made a parl. bor. in 1832, and a mun. bor. in 1850; the bor. was extended in 1902. It returns 1 member to Parliament.

NW. of London by rail; parl. and mun. bor., 3525 ac., pop. 28,395. The parliamentary constituency contains 4776 electors. Market days, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday. Shrewsbury, with its fine old timbered houses, is one of the most picturesque of English towns. It is situated on a peninsula formed by a bend of the Severn, which is spanned by four bridges—the English bridge, leading to the suburb of Abbey-Foregate; the Welsh bridge, leading to the suburb of Frankwell; the Kingsland and Greyfriars bridges. Among the chief objects of interest are the remains of the old walls; the ruins of the castle, built immediately after the Conquest; the Church of Holy Cross, originally attached to a great Benedictine abbey; the grammar school of Edward VI., now ranking high among public schools, and at which Sir Philip Sidney, Judge Jeffreys, and Charles Darwin were pupils; the old market-house, of time of Elizabeth; and the monuments to Lord Clive and Lord Hill. The Quarry Promenade, in the public park, along the river side, has a fine avenue of lime trees, planted in 1719. Shrewsbury is a railway centre, the station extends across the river and is partly built over it; the town has glass-staining and malting, linen-thread mfrs., iron foundries, and agricultural implement works. There are fortnightly sales of store cattle and sheep, and monthly horse sales. It was a place of great importance in the frontier wars of the Saxon and Norman periods, and in 1403 was the scene of a great battle between the forces of the Earl of Northumberland and those of Henry IV., in which the Earl was defeated and his son "Hotspur" slain. Shrewsbury was first chartered by the Conqueror. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from the time of Edward I. until 1885.

Shropshire, or Salop, co., in west-midlands of England, bounded N. by Cheshire and detached part of Flintshire, E. by Staffordshire, S. by Worcestershire, Herefordshire, and Radnorshire, and W. by Montgomeryshire and Denbighshire; area of administrative county, 861,802 ac., pop. 239,783. The parliamentary constituencies contain 39,710 electors. The county is served by the G. W. R., G. W. & L. & NW. Jt. R., Cam. R., and L. & NW. R. The river Severn, running SE., divides it into 2 nearly equal parts. The northern, occupied by the new red sandstone, is generally level; the southern, belonging to the old red sandstone, is of a more elevated and rugged character, reaching in the Clee Hills a height of 1792 ft. The soil is various, but generally fertile and well cultivated; there are, however, considerable tracts of waste land. The principal crops are wheat, barley, oats, pease, beans, vetches, turnips, and potatoes. The co. is famous for its breed of sheep. Cattle-breeding and dairy-farming are carried on in the S. and W. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal mineral products are coal and iron, with limestone, freestone, and lead. The Clee Hills, Forest of Wye, Coalbrookdale, Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Ironbridge are important coal centres. The mfrs., besides those connected with iron, are unimportant, and embrace malting, carpet making, paper making, and mfrs. of earthenware and agricultural implements. Shropshire is connected by the river with Gloucester and Bristol, and by canals with Chester and Liverpool, while Shrewsbury is a railway centre. Offa's Dyke forms part of the county boundary, while there are numerous Roman remains, including Wroxeter, the site of Uriconium. The co. contains 267 pars., the parl. and mun. bor. of Shrewsbury (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Bridgnorth, Ludlow, Oswestry, and Wenlock. It is in the dioceses of Hereford, Lichfield, and St. Asaph. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 4 divisions—viz., Western or Oswestry, Northern or Newport, Mid or Wellington, and Southern or Ludlow—1 member for each division.

R., Devon, at the mouth of the river Sid, 16 miles SE. of Exeter by road; urb. dist. and par., 1573 ac., pop. 4201; P.O., T.O. Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Sidmouth was formerly an important seaport, and in the time of Edward III. sent two ships to the siege of Calais; but the harbour became choked up, and no craft can now approach the town except fishing smacks and pleasure boats. Sidmouth, which occupies a beautiful situation in a valley between two high hills (Peake Hill and Salcombe Down), was in the early part of the 19th century an important seaside resort. It was for a time very much neglected, but the opening of the railway (1874) again made it one of the chief watering-places in Devon. Has lifeboat and coastguard station. The west window of the parish church (built 1259, restored 1860) was presented by Queen Victoria in memory of her father, the Duke of Kent, who died at Sidmouth in 1820. In the centre of the promenade is a fixed light visible 8 miles.

Silloth, seaport town and watering-place with ry. sta., N. B. R., Cumberland, on the Solway Firth, 22¼ miles WSW. of Carlisle by rail; P.O., T.O. Silloth dates from 1855, when it was selected, on account of its good anchorage ground, as the port of Carlisle, a position till that time held by Port Carlisle. A railway and a wet dock of 4 ac. were then constructed, and a considerable trade quickly sprang up with Liverpool, Dublin, and the Isle of Man, the principal export being coal and the principal import grain. A new dock of 6 ac. was opened in 1885; additions have been made and the docks are now extensive. The mild, equable, and salubrious climate of Silloth has caused it to become a health-resort. There is a golf course 2¾ m. in length.

Sligo.—a maritime co. of Connaught province, bounded N. by the Atlantic Ocean, E. by co. Leitrim, SE. by co. Roscommon, S. by cos. Roscommon and Mayo, and W. by co. Mayo and Killala Bay; greatest length, N. and S., 38 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 36 miles; average breadth, 18 miles; coast-line, about 60 miles; area, 452,356 ac. (11,815 water), or 2.2 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 84,083, of whom 76,146, or 90.6 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 6415, or 7.6, Protestant Episcopalians; 662, or 0.8, Presbyterians; and 518, or 0.6, Methodists. The co. is served by the M. G. W. R., G. S. & W. R., and Sligo, Leitrim, and Northern Cos. Ry. The coast, along which are Donegal, Sligo, and Killala Bays, is low and sandy. The surface of the main body of the co. gradually rises from the coast to the ridges of the Ox Mountains, whence it descends into the valleys of the Moy and other streams. The narrow district to the N. of the town of Sligo is chiefly occupied with mountains, the surface shelving down to a low sandy waste by the coast. The largest loughs are Gill, Arrow, Gara, Easky, and Talt. The principal rivers are the Moy, the Easky, the Owenmore, and the Garrogue. Limestone and mica slate are the prevailing rocks; old red sandstone occurs in the extreme N. Much of the soil is fertile, especially in the vicinity of Sligo. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Coarse woollens and friezes are manufactured for home use. The coast fisheries are extensive, and the streams afford good angling. The co. comprises 36 pars. and 4 parts of pars., and the town of Sligo. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Sligo and South Sligo, 1 member for each division. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 15,951 electors.—2. Sligo, market and seaport town, mun. bor., and co. town of Sligo with ry. sta., M. G. W. R., also served by G. S. & W. R. and Sligo, Leitrim, and Northern Counties Ry., on Sligo Bay, 48½ miles W. of Innisk'len and 134 m. NW. of Dublin by rail; mun. bor., 2916 ac., pop. 10,870. Market days, Tuesday and Friday. The town is finely situated on the banks of the Garrogue (Irish, Sligeach, or "Shelley Water"), a stream which runs from Lough Gill to Sligo Bay, and the surrounding scenery is beautiful and romantic. The old castle of Sligo was destroyed in 1277, and the abbey, situated near the town, is now an interesting ruin. Sligo is the most important seaport in the NW. of Ireland, and has large exports of live-stock, grain, butter, eggs, and pork. Steamers ply regularly between this port and Glasgow and Liverpool. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) There are flour and corn mills, sawmills, a brewery, &c. Sligo is the headquarters of a very extensive fishery district. R., Hants, at head of Southampton Water, on peninsula between the mouths of the Test and the Itchen, 18 m. NW. of Portsmouth and 79 SW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 7928 ac., pop. 120,215; co. bor., 4501 ac., pop. 104,824. The parliamentary constituency contains 17,401 electors. Market day, Friday. The prosperity of Southampton is due to its selection as the mail-packet station for the East and West Indies, and the principal British colonies; it is a port of embarkation for ocean-going liners. It is the most important mail-packet station in the kingdom, and the calling port of several lines of steamships. The dock accommodation is extensive, and the maritime trade is large and rapidly increasing. The docks were acquired by the L. & SW. R. in 1891; further additions and extensions have recently been made; the largest vessels can enter or leave irrespective of the tide. Over the Itchen is a steam floating bridge; the Royal Pier with pavilion was reconstructed in 1892; trains run to the pier-head. The Royal Southampton Yacht Club and the Royal Southern Yacht Club have club-houses here. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The industries are chiefly in connection with marine architecture and engineering. Southampton stands on an acclivity rising gradually from the sea, and consists of an old town and a new town. There are still standing considerable remains of the ancient walls and three of the gates, the most notable of which is the Bar Gate, with its huge figures of Sir Bevis of Hampton and the giant Ascaparte, and with the town hall in the upper part of it. Among the other objects of interest are St. Michael's church, a large Norman structure; the free grammar school, where Dr. Isaac Watts (1674–1748) was educated (the house in which he was born is in French Street, and may yet be seen); the Southampton College; the Hartley Institution of Science and Art; the Domus Dei Hospital (time of Henry III.), with St. Julien's French Protestant church attached; the headquarters of the Ordnance Survey; and the public parks. Of these last the most important is Southampton Common, a beautiful tract of richly wooded pleasure-ground, extending to about 400 ac.; on the common are the racecourse, arboretum, and cemetery. In the neighbourhood of Southampton are the extensive ruins of Netley Abbey, beyond which is the Royal Victoria Hospital for sick soldiers. Founded by the Saxons near the site of the old Roman station at Bitterne, Southampton was an important place both before and after the Conquest, and till 1522 was frequently the place of rendezvous for expeditions against France. It was first chartered by Henry I., and has sent 2 members to Parliament since Edward I. The parliamentary limits were extended in 1895 so as to include Shirley, Freemantle, Millbrook, and part of Bitterne.

Stafford, parl. and mun. bor., par., and county town of Staffordshire, with ry. sta., L. & NW. R., also served by G. N. R. (Stafford Common) and N. S. R., on river Sow, 27 miles NW. of Birmingham and 134 NW. of London by rail—parl. and mun. bors. and par., 1084 ac., pop. 20,895. Market days, Monday and Saturday. There are cattle markets every alternate Tuesday, and several cattle and horse fairs are held. Stafford grew up around a Saxon stronghold, which was replaced after the Conquest by a Norman castle. Fragments of the old walls still remain. The town is in general well built. Among the principal objects of interest are the two old churches of St. Mary and St. Chad, both recently restored; Edward VI.'s grammar school; the "William Salt" library; the county and town buildings, &c. Stafford is an important railway centre. Its chief industrial establishments are iron, engineering, and salt works, and several extensive factories for the mfr. of boots and shoes. There are technical and art schools, free libraries, public baths, &c. Izaak Walton (1593-1683), the angler, was a native. Stafford gives the title of marquis to the Gowers, and of baron to the Jerninghams. Stafford Castle is the seat of Lord Stafford. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from Edward I. until 1885, when its parliamentary limits were extended. The parliamentary constituency contains 3543 electors.

Staffordshire, co. in west-midlands of England; bounded NW. and N. by Cheshire, NE. and E. by Derbyshire, SE. by Warwickshire, S. by Worcestershire, and W. by Shropshire; greatest length, N. and S., 50 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 34 miles; area, 744,984 ac., pop. 1,236,919. The co. is served by the N. S. R., L. & NW. R., partly by the G. N. R., M. R., and G. W. R. Staffordshire lies in the basin of the Trent, which traverses the co. from NW. to SE., receiving the Sow (with its tributary the Penk), Tame, Blythe, and Dove. Except in the north, which is chiefly wild moorland, the surface is generally level or gently undulating. About three-fourths of the surface is arable, but much of the soil is of a cold clayey nature; the best land is in the south. Along the banks of the streams are many rich meadows. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The new red sandstone occupies the whole of the centre of the co., but in the N. and S. are two valuable coal fields—the Pottery coal field and the Dudley coal field, the latter of which is celebrated for the extraordinary thickness of one of its seams, for the excellence of its coal for ironmaking, and the number and richness of its iron ores. Although still abundant, the production of iron ore has somewhat decreased of recent years. Its mineral wealth has given Staffordshire high rank in England for manufacturing industry, North Staffordshire being the chief seat of the earthenware mfr. in the kingdom, and South Staffordshire one of the chief seats of the iron mfr. Gypsum and zinc ore are worked, and at Stafford salt is extracted from brine. Other industries include brewing at Burton upon Trent, silk spinning and dyeing at Leek, and mfr. of aluminium at Oldbury. The "Black Country" is celebrated for mfrs. of all branches of the iron industry, including locomotives at Soho, railway carriages at Oldham, and anchors at Tipton. The whole county is covered with a network of railways and canals. Staffordshire contains 277 pars.; part of the parl. bors. of Birmingham and Dudley, the parl. and co. bors. of Hanley, Walsall, West Bromwich, and Wolverhampton (3 members), the parl. and mun. bors. of Newcastle under Lyme, Stafford, Stoke upon Trent, and Wednesbury, the co. bor. of Burton upon Trent, the mun. bors. of Burslem, Lichfield (which is a city and co. of itself), Longton, Smethwick, and Tamworth. It is mostly in the diocese of Lichfield. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 7 divisions—viz., Leek, Burton, Western, North Western, Lichfield, Kingswinford, and Handsworth, 1 member for each division; the representation was increased from 6 to 7 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 94,419 electors.

Market day, Thursday. Stirling is one of the oldest and most interesting towns of Scotland, and is associated with many important events in Scottish history. The castle is finely situated on the summit of a precipitous rock, the abrupt termination of the rising ground on which the town stands, and commands a magnificent view. It was taken by the English in 1296, was held by them from 1304-1314, was long a favourite royal residence and was the birthplace of James II. and James V., the latter of whom was also crowned here. The buildings consist of the Chapel Royal (originally founded by Alexander I. and rebuilt by James VI.), the Parliament House (built by James III.), the Palace (by James V.) and other portions, which now serve as infantry barracks. The town and its environs are full of historical associations; several famous battles, including Bannockburn (1314), were fought in the vicinity. There are many other objects of interest, including the King's Knot, the King's Park, the Mote Hill or Heading Hill, Argyll's Lodging, Mar's Work, the Old Greyfriars Church, &c. Stirling is situated on the line of communication between the Highlands and the Lowlands, and is a railway centre. There is a jetty on the Forth; a steamer plies to and from Leith during the season, the passage being greatly lengthened by the numerous windings of the river. Manufactures of tartans, tweeds, carpets, leather, and agricultural implements are carried on. The Stirling District of Parliamentary Burghs (Stirling, Dunfermline, Culross, Inverkeithing, and Queensferry) returns 1 member. The parliamentary constituency contains 7229 electors.

Stirlingshire, west-midland county of Scotland; bounded N. by Perthshire, NE. by Clackmannanshire, E. by the Firth of Forth and Linlithgowshire, S. by Linlithgowshire, Lanarkshire, and detached part of Dumbartonshire, and W. by Dumbartonshire; greatest length, NW. and SE., 46 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 26 miles—area, 451.3 sq. m., or 288,842 ac.; civ. co., pop. 142,291, or 315 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 94,174. The E. part of the co. is flat, finely wooded, and well cultivated; and the valley of the Forth along the N. boundary includes some of the finest land in Scotland. The middle and S. are occupied with hills and valleys—the principal ridges being the Campsie Fells and Kilsyth Hills, and the Fintry Hills and Gargunnock Hills. On the W. a long projection extends northwards, including a mountainous district in which Ben Lomond rises to an alt. of 3193 ft., and parts of Loch Lomond and Loch Katrine. Besides the Forth, the chief streams are the Avon, Carron, Teith, Bannock, Allan, Endrick, and Blane. The Forth and Clyde Canal joins the river Carron at Grangemouth. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Coal and ironstone are extensively worked; limestone and sandstone are abundant. Manufactures connected with iron form the staple industry; and there are important manufactures of woollens and cotton; several large chemical works and distilleries. The co. comprises 22 pars., the parl. and police burgh of Stirling (part of the Stirling District of Burghs—1 member), the parl. and police burgh of Falkirk (part of the Falkirk District of Burghs—1 member), and the police burghs of Bridge of Allan, Denny and Dunipace, Grangemouth, and Kilsyth. It returns 1 member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 18,228 electors. The co. is served by the C. R. and N. B. R.

(including also Reddish par.), 5492 ac., pop. 92,832; par., 3951 ac., pop. 84,164. Market day, Friday. Numerous fairs are held throughout the year. Stockport is an ancient place, with the site of a castle of Saxon and Norman times; but its importance is chiefly of modern date, and is owing to the marvellous expansion of the cotton trade, which has superseded the silk trade, and in its various departments of spinning, weaving, bleaching, printing, and dyeing, has become the staple industry of the town. There are also hat mfrs., engine and machine shops, iron and brass foundries, breweries, and brick works. The town is built on the slopes of a narrow gorge where the Tame and the Goyt unite to form the Mersey, and has a very picturesque appearance. Some of its principal features are St. Mary's Church (with ancient chancel), the free grammar school (1487), the free library, the Vernon Park (with museum), and the great railway viaduct which crosses the Mersey. There is tramway connection with Manchester. Stockport was made a free borough in the time of Henry III., and a parl. borough in 1832. It returns 2 members to Parliament. The parliamentary constituencies contain 12,622 electors.

R., Durham, on river Tees, 4 miles from its mouth and 4 miles SW. of Middlesbrough—parl. bor. (including Thornaby, in N. R. Yorkshire, on opposite side of river), 7001 ac., pop. 71,815; mun. bor. and par., 2935 ac., pop. 51,478. The parliamentary constituency contains 12,114 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. There is a weekly cattle market. Stockton was long under the bishops of Durham, one of whom built its castle, which was dismantled after the Civil War, and has now totally disappeared, its last remains having been removed in 1865. Its commerce rose to importance through the decline of Hartlepool about 1683, was somewhat checked by the rise of Middlesbrough, but is still large and flourishing. The wharves here will accommodate large vessels. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The mfrs. formerly consisted almost exclusively of linen and sailcloth, but the development of the iron mines of Cleveland has led to a rapidly increasing trade in iron smelting and rolling, iron shipbuilding, and the mfr. of iron rails, iron bridges, marine engines, boilers, gas holders, &c. There are also potteries and bottle works. Stockton is a well-built town with many handsome public edifices, and is connected with Thornaby by a stone and iron bridge. In the neighbourhood is a racecourse. Ropner Park, on the south side of the town, was opened by the present Prince and Princess of Wales in 1893. Stockton was incorporated prior to 1344, and was made a parliamentary bor. in 1867. It returns 1 member to Parliament.—2. Stockton, par., 2 miles SW. of Malpas, Cheshire; 271 ac., pop. 28.—3. (containing also the pars. of Ballingdon and S. St. Bartholomew), 1925 ac., pop. 7109; par., 911 ac., pop. 6414; P.O., T.O. Market day, Thursday. Sudbury (a corruption of Southborough) was formerly one of the most considerable places in the eastern counties. After the Conquest it became the seat of several religious establishments; and it was one of the towns selected by Edward III. for the settlement of the Flemings, with a view to the introduction of the woollen cloth mfr. Mfrs. of silk and velvet, and lime and brick works, give employment to the inhabitants. The river has been rendered navigable for barges up to the town, and there is a considerable trade in coal and agricultural produce. Gainsborough (1727–1788), the painter, was a native. Sudbury was made a mun. bor. by Queen Elizabeth; it was formerly a parl. bor., but was disfranchised in 1843.—2. Sudbury, par. and vil. with ry. sta., N. S. Suffolk, maritime co. in E. of England, bounded N. by Norfolk, from which it is separated by the Waveney and Little Ouse, E. by the North Sea, S. by Essex, from which it is separated by the Stour, and W. by Cambridgeshire, from which it is separated by the Lark; area, 948,768 ac., pop. 373,353. The county is served by the G. E. R. and a small district by the Southwold Ry. The coast line (of about 50 miles), broken by the estuaries of the Stour, Orwell, Deben, and Alde, is generally low, and the sea has made great encroachments, particularly in the neighbourhood of Dunwich and Aldeburgh. The surface is generally level, and the soil is very varied—occasional fen, loam on the borders of the rivers, sand on the eastern and western borders, and clay in the centre. This last is fertile, and large crops are grown of wheat, barley, pease, and beans, the barley in particular being in high repute with brewers. Butter is extensively made for the London markets. Sheep are reared in the NW., which is hilly; and the Suffolk cart-horse, esteemed for its power of draught, is raised in considerable numbers. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The mfrs.—principally agricultural implements and artificial manure—are limited. Fine sea-salt is made on the coast. The trade of the seaports is chiefly in corn and malt. The herring and mackerel fisheries are extensively prosecuted at Lowestoft and other places, and oysters are found in the Orwell and Orford. Most of the towns have river communication, and the Stowmarket Canal intersects the county. The county comprises 519 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Ipswich (2 members), the parl. and mun. bor. of Bury St. Edmunds (1 member), the mun. bors. of Aldeburgh, Beccles, Eye, Lowestoft, Southwold, and Sudbury. It is in the dioceses of Norwich and Ely. For parl. purposes it is divided into 5 divisions—viz., Northern or Lowestoft, North-Eastern or Eye, North-Western or Stowmarket, South or Sudbury, and South-Eastern or Woodbridge, 1 member for each division; the representation was increased from 4 to 5 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies contain 56,352 electors.

Sunderland.—parl. and co. bor., seaport town, and par., with ry. sta., N. E. R., Durham, at mouth of river Wear, 12 miles SE. of Newcastle by rail—parl. bor., 4673 ac., pop. 158,877; co. bor. and par., 3357 ac., pop. 146,077. Market day, Saturday. There are fairs in May and October. The river is spanned at Monkwearmouth by a famous iron bridge of one arch (108 ft. above low-water mark and 236 ft. span), erected in 1796, and restored and improved in 1858. In Monkwearmouth (with which Sunderland was long more or less identified) is an ancient parish church, standing on the site of the monastery, of 7th century, in which the Venerable Bede spent the greater part of his life. Sunderland rose into importance as a seat of trade and commerce about the middle of the 18th century, and is now one of the chief coal-shipping ports in the kingdom. Its facilities as a port have been greatly improved of late years; the harbour is formed by two stone piers 617 and 650 yards long; extensive docks have been constructed. At the head of the inner north pier are two fixed lights visible 13 and 6 miles respectively, and at the head of the inner south pier is a fixed light visible 10 miles. The protecting piers, known as Roker Pier and New South Breakwater, about 2900 ft. in length, were commenced in 1885 and 1891. The Hudson dock was named after Hudson, "the Railway King," a former member of Parliament for the borough. A large trade is done with the Baltic ports and with Holland. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) After its coal trade and shipping, the town depends chiefly upon its shipbuilding; it has also large marine engineering works, works for heavy iron-forging, and for the mfr. of glass, cordage, earthenware, &c. Sunderland has many handsome public buildings (including several charitable and educational institutions), excellent sanitary arrangements and parks, museum, free library, school of art, and public baths. There is an electrical tramway system. There are Royal Artillery barracks, several coastguard stations, and a Volunteer Life Brigade with three lifeboats. General Sir Henry Havelock (1795–1857), of Indian Mutiny fame, was a native. Sunderland was early chartered (under the name of the new borough of Monkwearmouth) by the bishop of Durham, and was made a parl. bor. in 1832; it returns 2 members to Parliament. The parliamentary constituencies contain 27,593 electors.—2. Sunderland, par., Cumberland, 5 miles NE. of Cockermouth; 806 ac., pop. 55.—3. Sunderland, hamlet, N. Lancashire, 3 miles SW. of Lancaster Surrenden Dering, seat, Kent, 5 miles NW. of Ashford.

Surrey, co. in SE. of England, bounded N. by the Thames, which separates it from Bucks, Middlesex, and co. London, E. by Kent, S. by Sussex, W. by Hants, and NW. by Berks; greatest length, N. and S., 25 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., about 40 miles; area, civ. co. (exclusive of civ. pars. in admin. co. of London), 461,999 ac., pop. 675,774; admin. co. (with co. bor. of Croydon), 461,807 ac., pop. 653,549. The county is served by the L. & SW. R., L. B. & S. C. R., and SE. & C. R. Surrey is traversed from E. to W. by the North Downs range, from which the surface slopes gently down towards the Thames on the N., while on the S. it descends into an extensive flat plain (partly also in the cos. of Kent and Sussex) called the Weald. Except a small portion in the SW., and another small portion in the SE., the whole of the co. is drained by the Thames and its tributaries, the Wey, Mole, and Wandle. There are many varieties of soil, including plastic and alluvial clays, rich vegetable loam, calcareous earth, and almost barren heath. On the plastic clays the crops are wheat and beans; the alluvial soils, particularly in the vicinity of the metropolis, are chiefly occupied by orchards, market gardens, and farms for the culture of medical and aromatic plants; on the loamy soils the crops are barley, oats, and pease, carrots and parsnips; while the chief products of the calcareous soils are hops and clover. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Fuller's earth is found at Nutfield and Reigate, the only two places in England, with the exception of Midford in Somerset, in which it is found in sufficiently large quantities to be worth working. There are some industries in drugs, tobacco, calicoes, woollen goods, &c., and those places situated on the Thames share in the trade of the port of London, but (except in that part of the co. included within the limits of the metropolis) the trade and mfrs. are not of great importance. The amenities of climate and scenery, the vicinity of the metropolis, and the complete means of railway communication, have caused many parts of Surrey to be studded over with mansions and villas. The county contains many well-known resorts, including Cooper's Hill, Richmond Park, Leith Hill, Box Hill, Kew Gardens, and Virginia Water. The co. contains 143 pars., the parl. and co. bor. of Croydon (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Godalming, Guildford, Kingston upon Thames, Reigate, and Richmond. The co. is in the dioceses of Canterbury, Rochester, and Winchester. Guildford and Kingston are the county towns, the assizes being held at Guildford, while the County Council sits in the County Hall at Kingston. For parl. purposes it is divided into 6 divisions—viz., North-Western or Chertsey, South-Western or Reigate, Mid or Epsom, Kingston, and part of North-Eastern or Wimbledon, 1 member for each division. The parliamentary constituencies contain 88,599 electors.

Surrey Commercial Docks, in met. bor. of Bermondsey, co. London.

Sussex, maritime co. in SE. of England, bounded N. and NE. by Surrey and Kent, SE. and S. by the English Channel, and W. and NW. by Hants; greatest length, N. and S., 27 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 76 m.; the administrative counties of E. Sussex (including two co. bors.) and W. Sussex have an area of 932,409 ac., pop. 602,255. From the Hants border, near Petersfield, to Beachy Head, the co. is traversed by the South Downs; to the N. of this range of chalk hills is the valley of the Weald, rising into the Forest Ridge on the NE., and sinking on the SE., towards the sea., into wide marshes. During the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II. the encroachments of the sea led to the submergence of over 5000 ac. of land; the site of Selsey Cathedral is said to lie a mile out at sea. The rivers are not important; they are the Arun, Adur, Ouse, and Rother, all flowing S. to the English Channel. The principal means of communication are the railways; these belong chiefly to the L. B. & S. C. system, which has steamers running daily between Newhaven and Dieppe; the co. is also served by the SE. & C. R., Selsey Ry., and a branch of the L. & SW. R. The most fertile soil is the low land along the coast, which yields heavy crops of grain and hay; the South Downs are chiefly pastoral, and support a well-known breed of sheep to which they give name; the Weald consists generally of sandy or tenacious clays of a very indifferent description, but the clays produce a stiff soil, remarkably favourable to the growth of forest trees, particularly the oak; hops are grown in the eastern part of the co. which borders on the hop districts of Kent. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Ironstone is abundant, and so long as wood only was used for smelting the co. was one of the chief seats of the British iron trade. "Sussex marble," a kind of limestone containing fresh-water shells, is worked near Petworth. The mfrs. include woollens, paper, gunpowder, bricks and tiles, &c., but are not extensive. The seaports are now small and comparatively unimportant, but the mildness of the climate along the sea coast has led to the growth of numerous watering and bathing places and health resorts, including Brighton, Hastings, Eastbourne, Worthing, Seaford, Littlehampton, and Bognor. Sussex was the scene of much of the early history of the country, and is rich in archæological remains. The co. contains the parl. and co. bors. of Brighton (2 members) and Hastings (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Arundel, Chichester, Eastbourne, Hove, Lewes, Rye, and Worthing. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Chichester. Lewes is the capital, having the assizes for the whole geographical county and the County Council for E. Sussex, but the County Council for the admin. county of W. Sussex sits at Chichester. For parl. purposes it is divided into 6 divisions—viz., North-Western or Horsham, South-Western or Chichester, Northern or East Grinstead, Mid or Lewes, Southern or Eastbourne, and Eastern or Rye, 1 member for each division; the representation was increased from 4 to 6 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies contain 69,714 electors.

Sutherland, maritime co. in the extreme N. of Scotland; is bounded W. and N. by the Atlantic Ocean, E. by Caithness and the Moray Firth, and S. by the Dornoch Firth and Ross and Cromarty; greatest length, NW. and SE., 63 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 60 miles; area, 2027.9 sq. m. or 1,297,849 ac.; civ. co., pop. 21,440 or 11 persons to each sq. mile; admin. co., pop. 20,615. The co. is served by the H. R. The N. and NW. coasts are bold and rocky, some of the cliff scenery being remarkably grand, but along the Moray Firth the ground is generally low and sandy. The surface consists chiefly of mountainous moorland, varied by numerous straths or narrow valleys which open towards the sea. The highest summit is Ben More, Assynt; alt., 3273 ft. The principal streams are the Oykell, Brora, Helmsdale, Halladale, Naver, and Hope. Of numerous lochs the largest are Lochs Shin, Assynt, Naver, Laoghal, Hope, and More. The angling in the lochs and streams is good, especially for trout. The coast fisheries are considerable. The amount of arable land is comparatively very small. There are extensive deer forests, and sheep are grazed in great numbers. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The co. comprises 13 pars. with part of 1 other, and the parl. burgh of Dornoch (part of the Wick District of Burghs). It returns 1 member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 2783 electors.

Swansea is called by the Welsh Abertawe, from its position at the mouth of the Tawe. Copperworks were first established in 1719, and Swansea is now the principal seat of the copper trade in the country; it possesses an abundant supply of coal for smelting. In addition to copper it has extensive mfrs. of tin-plate, iron, steel, zinc, alkali, and patent fuel. Imports include copper, silver, lead, tin, nickel iron, and iron ore. The harbour and docks are extensive and commodious, and admit the largest vessels; and there is an active trade with the principal British and Continental ports, coal and patent fuel being largely exported. The Swansea Docks, upon which £1,610,000 has been expended, are managed by trustees; powers have been obtained for the construction of a new dock at an estimated cost of £1,500,000; the first sod was cut by King Edward VII. in July 1904. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) One of the principal objects of interest is the massive tower of the castle originally founded in 1099, and long garrisoned by the English and Flemish colonists who were settled in the peninsula of Gower. Swansea is the home of the Royal Institution of South Wales. There are numerous public buildings, parks, and recreation grounds. At the head of the West Pier is a fixed light visible 7 miles. It was chartered by John, and incorporated by Henry III. The Swansea Boroughs (Aberavon, Kenfig, Loughor, Neath and Swansea) returned 1 member to Parliament till 1885. Swansea now returns 2 members to Parliament (2 divisions—viz., Swansea Town and Swansea District, 1 member for each div.) The parliamentary constituencies together contain 21,543 electors.

Temple.—ry. sta. on Met. Dist. Ry., London, between Charing Cross and Blackfriars. The Temple is an extensive series of buildings on S. side of Fleet Street, belonging to the members of the two Inns of Court, and known as the Inner Temple and Middle Temple; it takes its name from the Knights Templars, who held it 1184–1313, and whose tombs are in the Temple Church (1185), built on the model of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, and one of the four round churches in England. Temple Bar, between Fleet Street and the Strand, divided the city of London from Westminster; here the reigning monarch, when visiting the City on state occasions, was wont to obtain the Lord Mayor's permission to pass; it was designed by Sir Christopher Wren in 1670, and taken down (1878) on the erection of the new Law Courts, and re-erected near one of the entrances of Theobald's Park, Waltham Cross.—2. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Tenby was one of the Flemish settlements planted in Pembrokeshire in the 12th century, and until the time of Elizabeth was a port of much commercial importance. From that period it declined greatly until the present century, when it came into repute as a resort for bathing. It is now a flourishing watering-place; the firm extensive sands offer good facilities for bathing. Tenby is a meteorological station; the variety of the marine fauna makes it a place of great interest to the naturalist. On Victoria Pier, Castle Hill, is a fixed light visible 3 miles, and on the harbour pier head another fixed light, also visible 3 miles. The trade of the port is not extensive, chiefly fish. The church is interesting, and some portions of the old walls still remain, but the ruins on Castle Hill are inconsiderable.

Thame, river, Bucks and Oxford; rises near Dunton, in Bucks, and flows 30 miles SW. to the Thames at Dorchester, 4 miles above Wallingford.

Thames, the most important river of Great Britain; rises on the E. side of the Cotswold Hills, in 4 headstreams, the Thames or Isis, Churn (which has its source in the Seven Springs), Coln, and Leach, which unite near Lechlade, on the border of Gloucester, Wilts, Berks, and Oxford; flows E. along the boundary between Oxford, Bucks, Middlesex, and Essex on the N., and Berks, Surrey, and Kent on the S., past the towns of Oxford, Abingdon, Reading, Great Marlow, Windsor, Staines, Chertsey, Kingston, Richmond, and Brentford, and through London, to the Nore, where its estuary terminates in the North Sea. It receives as tributaries, on the left, the Windrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, Thame, Colne, Brent, Lea, and Roding; and on the right, the Kennet, Loddon, Wey, Mole, Wandle, Ravensbourne, Cray, and Darent; and it communicates, by means of numerous canals, with all the other great rivers of the kingdom. In its upper course it passes through some of the richest agricultural districts of the country; and below London Bridge it is one of the most important commercial highways in the world, the accommodation for shipping being of the most extensive description. From Lechlade to the Nore its direct course is 124 miles, and its indirect course 210 miles; at London Bridge its width is 266 yards, at Woolwich 490 yards, at Gravesend 800 yards, 3 miles below Gravesend 1290 yards, and at the Nore over 5 miles. It is navigable by vessels of the largest tonnage up to Tilbury Docks, by vessels of 800 tons up to St. Katherine's Docks, adjoining the Tower, and by barges up to Lechlade. A navigable channel for large ships to the port of London is only maintained by constant dredging. The part of the river between London Bridge and Blackwall constitutes the Port of London, the portion immediately below the bridge being called the Pool, usually occupied by coal ships.

Thames Embankment, The, includes the Albert Embankment (opened 1869), on the south side of the river, from Westminster Bridge to Vauxhall; the Victoria Embankment (1870), on the north side of the river, from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars; and the Chelsea Embankment (1874), on the same side of the river, from Chelsea Bridge to Battersea Bridge. This gigantic engineering work has already cost several millions.

Thames Tunnel, The, between Rotherhithe, Surrey, and Wapping, about 2 miles below London Bridge; is 1300 ft. long, and 75 ft. beneath low-water mark; constructed (1825–1843) by Brunel, it was originally designed for waggons and foot-passengers, but is now the property of the East London Ry. Co., who run their trains through it.

Thames and Severn Canal, Gloucestershire and Wilts; extends from the Stroudwater Canal, near Stroud, to the Thames at Lechlade, and connects the navigation of the Thames with that of the Severn; rises 243 ft., has 42 locks, is 30 miles long and 42 ft. wide, and was formed in 1783–92. It is joined at Cricklade by the North Wilts Canal.

Tipperary.—an inland county of Munster province, Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Galway and King's co., E. by Queen's co. and co. Kilkenny, S. by co. Waterford, and W. by cos. Cork, Limerick, and Clare; greatest length, N. and S., 66 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 40 miles; average breadth, 26 miles; area, 1,062,963 ac. (13,687 water), or 5.1 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 160,232, of whom 150,332 or 93.8 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 8702 or 5.4 Episcopalians, 465 or 0.3 Presbyterians, and 560 or 0.4 Methodists. The greater part of the surface is level, and much of the soil is very fertile, especially in the Golden Vale, which is calcareous loam. The prevailing rock is carboniferous limestone. The mountains of Knockmealdown (2609 ft.) extend about 15 miles along the S. border, the Galtees (3015 ft.) are in the SW., and Slievenaman (2564 ft.) rises in the SE., while the Keeper and Devil's Bit ranges stretch about 18 miles NE. and SW. along the S. of the N. division of the county. The principal rivers are the Shannon, the Suir, and the Nore. Wheat, oats, barley, &c., are grown; dairy farms are numerous, and butter is exported in large quantities. Milk condensing is a thriving industry at Clonmel. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The co. is divided into North and South Ridings, and comprises 180 pars. and 16 parts of pars.; and the towns of Clonmel, Tipperary, Carrick-on-Suir, Nenagh, Thurles, Cashel, Templemore, Roscrea, Caher, and Fethard. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 4 divisions—viz., North Tipperary, Mid. Tipperary, South Tipperary, and East Tipperary, each returning 1 member; the representation of Tipperary was increased from 2 to 4 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies contain 22,979 electors.—2. Tipperary, market town, urb. dist., and par., with ry. sta., G. S. & W. R., in SW. of co. Tipperary, on river Arra, 25 m. Market day, Saturday. Totnes dates from very ancient times, and has aspects of antiquity in many of its houses, the most striking features being the loggias or colonnades in the main street, after the manner of Italian towns. It has, besides the keep of the Norman castle built at the Conquest, two gateways of the old walls, a quaint guild hall, a fine church rebuilt in the 15th century, and a grammar school founded in 1554. The grounds surrounding the castle ruins have been tastefully laid out and thrown open to the public. A handsome bridge of three arches over the Dart connects Totnes proper with Bridgetown. In the square is a monument of William John Wills, the Australian explorer, who was a native of Totnes. There is a considerable fishery, but there is little trade beyond the importation of coal. Cattle markets are held on the first and third Tuesday of every month, and fairs in May and October. There are slate quarries in the neighbourhood. Totnes was incorporated by King John, and sent 2 members to Parliament from the time of Edward I. until 1867.

Tower of London, par., co. of London, in met. bor. of Stepney; 22 ac., pop. 61; is now included in the par. of St. Botolph (Without) Aldgate. The par. contains the fortress of the same name, founded by William the Conqueror, probably on the site of an older fortress; once a fortress, a royal residence, a court of justice, and a prison, it is now a Government storehouse and armoury. To the east of the Tower of London is the Tower Bridge; it was opened in 1894 and cost £1,184,000. The main portion of the bridge consists of two immense towers rising to a height of 150 ft. above high water, and communicating with the shore on either side by two suspension bridges, 27 ft. above high water. Between these towers are two bridges, the lower one of which is on the same level as the outer suspension bridges, admits both passenger and vehicular traffic, and is worked by hydraulic power to lift in two portions, thus avoiding interference with shipping. The higher bridge is used as a footway when the lower one is up, and access may be gained to it by means of lifts and staircases. The Tower Subway, an iron tube, 7 ft. in diameter and 1235 ft. in length, is laid 18 ft. below the bed of the Thames, and runs from Great Tower Hill on the Middlesex side of the river to Tooley Street on the south side; it was at first opened (1870) for tramway traffic, but in a few months was made a footway; is no longer in use.

Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Wakefield is a well-built town, with wide and regular streets, and with handsome public buildings. The Town Hall has a commanding clock tower. A curious relic of antiquity is the chapel on the bridge which spans the Calder, built by Edward IV. in memory of his father, Richard, Duke of York. Wakefield has considerable mfrs. of woollens, worsteds, and hosiery, breweries, roperies, foundries, iron and steel wire rope works, railway waggon works, chemical and soap works, and cocoa-fibre mat manufactories; it is a great mart for corn, malt, and wool; and in the neighbourhood are extensive coal mines. The mun. bor. was considerably extended in 1900. It was the scene of a battle in 1460, in which Richard, Duke of York, was defeated and slain; it was also the scene of frequent strife during the Civil War. The mun. bor. was declared a city by letters patent in 1888; the bishopric of Wakefield, founded in the same year, was formed chiefly from that of Ripon. The cathedral church of All Saints has a tower with spire 247 ft. high, the loftiest in Yorkshire. There are numerous imposing public buildings. Wakefield was incorporated in 1626; it was made a parliamentary borough in 1832, and returns 1 member; its parliamentary limits were extended in 1885 so as to include the Belle Vue portion of Sandal Magna parish. The parliamentary constituency contains 6409 electors.

Warwick.—par. and mun. bor., and co. town of Warwickshire, with ry. sta., G. W. R. (also served by L. & NW. trains to Milverton sta., which is in the W. outskirts of Leamington), on river Avon, 2 miles SW. of Leamington, 108 miles NW. of London by rail—mun. bor. (including the pars. of Warwick St. Mary, pop. 2975; Warwick St. Nicholas, pop. 2638), 5613 ac., pop. 11,889; parl. bor. (Warwick and Leamington), 9860 ac., pop. 39,075. The parliamentary constituencies of Warwick and Leamington contain 5999 electors. Market day, Saturday. Warwick seems to have been a place of some note, with a fortress, in Saxon times. It appears in Domesday Book as a borough with 261 houses. Its castle made it an important place during the Middle Ages, but the fire of 1694 swept away the majority of the old houses, and the town is mostly modern. Industrially Warwick is of little importance, but it has a considerable trade in cattle, corn, and provisions. One of the principal objects of interest is the castle, seat of the Earl of Warwick and Brooke, one of the few real old baronial residences still kept up and inhabited; it is full of historical associations, art treasures, and articles of vertu; here that Earl of Warwick, known as the "King Maker," conveyed Edward IV. as prisoner in 1469, and here, in 1575, Queen Elizabeth was entertained while en route to the festivities at Kenilworth. St. Mary's Church, with the Beauchamp chapel; the Earl of Leicester's hospital for aged brethren; and the two town gates, each surmounted by an ancient chapel, are also noteworthy. Warwick returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from Edward I. until 1885, when the parl. limits were extended so as to include the mun. bor. of Leamington and the pars. of Milverton and Lillington. It has tramway communication with Leamington.—2. Warwick, par. and vil., Cumberland, on river Eden, near Warwick Bridge, and 4 miles E. of Carlisle; 1857 ac., pop. 263; P.O., T.O.

Warwickshire, co. in west-midlands of England; bounded N. by Staffordshire, Derbyshire, and Leicestershire, E. by Northamptonshire, S. by Oxfordshire and Gloucestershire, and W. by Worcestershire; greatest length, N. and S., 52 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 32 miles; area, 579,885 ac., pop. 939,904. The co. is traversed in all directions by canals; the railways which serve it are the G. W. R., L. & NW. R., E. & W. Junction R., G. C. R., and M. R. Warwickshire presents a pleasant undulating surface of hill and dale, watered by the Avon, Leam, and Tame. The climate is mild and healthy, and the soil, except some cold stiff clays on the higher grounds, is fertile. It consists chiefly of a strong red loam adapted for wheat and beans, or a sandy loam for barley and turnips. Much land is kept in permanent pasture for grazing. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Formerly the co. was thickly wooded (that part N. of the Avon being called the Forest of Arden), and fine timber is still abundant. Geologically it mainly belongs to the secondary formation. A coalfield, 16 miles by 3 miles, extends from the neighbourhood of Coventry to the border of Staffordshire, E. of Tamworth. The principal minerals are coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, blue flagstone, and fireclay. The mfrs. are carried on chiefly at Birmingham and Coventry. There are mineral springs at Leamington, Stratford on Avon, Ilmington, Southam, Willoughby, King's Newnham, &c. Warwickshire comprises 267 pars., the parl. and co. bors. of Birmingham (7 members) and Coventry (1 member), the parl. bors. of Aston Manor (1 member) and Warwick and Leamington (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Leamington (Royal Leamington Spa), Stratford on Avon, Sutton Coldfield, and Warwick. It is mostly in the diocese of Worcester. For parl. purposes it is divided into 4 divisions—Northern or Tamworth, North-Eastern or Nuneaton, South-Western or Stratford on Avon, and South-Eastern or Rugby, 1 member for each division. The parliamentary constituencies contain 48,124 electors.

Waterford.—a maritime co. of Munster province, Ireland; is bounded N. by cos. Tipperary and Kilkenny, E. by co. Wexford, S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by co. Cork; greatest length, E. and W., 51 miles; greatest breadth, N. and S., 28 miles; average breadth, 15 miles; coast line about 50 miles; area, 458,108 ac. (5733 water), or 2.2 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 87,187, of whom 82,556, or 94.7 per cent., are Roman Catholics; 3685, or 4.2, Episcopalians; 323, or 0.4, Presbyterians; and 223, or 0.3, Methodists. The co. is served by the G. S. & W. R., D. W. & W. R., and Waterford and Tramore Ry. The coast is for the most part low and dangerous, and is broken by the inlets of Waterford Harbour, Tramore Bay, Dungarvan Harbour, and Youghal Bay. About two-thirds of the surface is hilly or mountainous; the Comeragh and Knockmealdown mountains are along the N. border with co. Tipperary; the Drum Hills occupy a part of the SW.; the E. district is flat, and much of it is marshy. In some parts the soil is very fertile, but dairy farming is much more practised than tillage. Large quantities of butter and bacon are exported. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Slaty rocks prevail; old red sandstone occurs on W. side of Waterford Harbour. Copper has been worked at Knockmahon; there are valuable quarries of marble near Cappoquin and Whitechurch. The coast and river fisheries are of considerable value; shell-fish is especially abundant on the coast. The principal rivers are the Suir and the Blackwater, which are navigable, and the Bride. The co. comprises 63 pars. and part of 10 others; the parl. and co. bor. of Waterford (1 member); and the urb. dist. of Dungarvan and the town of Lismore. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., West Waterford and East Waterford, each returning 1 member. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 8407 electors.—2. Waterford, city, co. bor., parl. bor., seaport, seat of a diocese, and co. of itself, with ry. stas. (W. North, W. South), G. S. & W. R., and the Manor Station of the Waterford and Tramore Ry.—the D. W. & W. R. also serve the town; NE. co. Waterford, on river Suir, 77 miles SE. of Limerick, 82 NE. of Cork, and 110 SW. of Dublin by rail—parl. bor., 9937 ac., pop. 29,181; co. bor., 1435 ac., pop. 26,769. Market days, Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Waterford, situated at the confluence of St. John's river with the Suir, and 15 miles from the sea, was founded by the Danes in the 9th century; was the place where Henry II. landed in 1172; was unsuccessfully besieged by Cromwell, but was taken by Ireton in 1650; and was the place where James II. embarked for France in 1690. The city is connected with the small suburb of Ferrybank, in co. Kilkenny, by a wooden bridge of 39 arches. It contains several fine public buildings, including literary, scientific, educational, and charitable institutions. Reginald's Tower, first built by Reginald the Dane in 1003 and rebuilt in 1819, was one of the ancient city fortifications. Vessels of 2000 tons can reach the quays, which possess convenient floating stages. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The exports consist chiefly of agricultural produce, including bacon, pork, butter, grain, flour, cattle, sheep, and pigs. Steamers sail regularly between Waterford and the ports of Cork, Dublin, Glasgow, Liverpool, and Plymouth. The railway traffic passing through Waterford is very extensive, there being direct communication with Limerick, Cork, and Dublin. Charles Kean, actor (1811–1868), and W. Vincent Wallace, musical composer (1814–1865), were natives. Waterford returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members until 1885. The parliamentary constituency contains 3504 electors.

Waterford Harbour, between co. Waterford and cos. Kilkenny and Wexford; is formed by the channel of the river Suir from Waterford city to its confluence with the Barrow, a distance of 6 miles, and thence by the joint estuary of these rivers to the sea, a further distance of 15 miles; is 2½ miles wide at the entrance; and is protected on the E. side by the strong fort of Duncannon. There are lighthouses at Hook Head, Dunmore, Duncannon Fort, and Black Head.

West Ham, parl. bor., co. bor., and par., with ry. sta., L. T. & S. R., Essex, on N. bank of river Thames, opposite Greenwich, and in E. of London; 4683 ac., pop. 267,358; contains Stratford town and has several industrial establishments in connection with the Victoria Docks, which it also contains along with a portion of the Royal Albert Docks; shipbuilding, soap and jute works, indiarubber works, &c. Here are the locomotive and ry. works of the G. E. R. and L. T. & S. R. The enormously rapid increase of the population may be set down to the desire to escape the restrictions imposed upon London manufactures under the Metropolitan Management Act 1854, and also to the overflow of population from London. The borough contains, amongst other public buildings, two of the finest libraries in the country stocked with upwards of 60,000 volumes. A branch library has been presented by J. Passmore Edwards, Esq. There are also several recreation grounds. See also STRATFORD. West Ham returns 2 members to Parliament (2 divisions—viz., North and South, 1 member for each division); it was made a parl. bor. in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies contain 39,130 electors.

Cavan (a small part of) and Meath; greatest length, NE. and SW., 44 miles; greatest breadth, NW. and SE., 26 miles; average breadth, 19 miles; area, 454,104 ac. (21,797 water), or 2.2 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 61,629, of whom 56,673 or 92.0 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 4271 or 6.9 Episcopalians, 319 or 0.5 Presbyterians, and 215 or 0.4 Methodists. The co. is served by the M. G. W. R., and a branch of the G. S. & W. R. The surface, with the exception of some bog in the S., is finely diversified with low hills, gentle undulations, and picturesque lakes. The land, both pasture and arable, is exceedingly fertile. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The largest lakes are Loughs Ree, Dereveragh, Ennel, Owel, Lene, and Iron; they afford splendid sport for the angler, the fish being usually large, especially in Lough Owel. The principal rivers are the Shannon, the Brosna, the Inny, and the Dale. There are several limestone quarries. Manufactures include frieze, flannel, and linen. The co. is traversed by the Royal Canal. Westmeath comprises 57 pars. and 7 parts of pars.; and the towns of Athlone and Mullingar. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Westmeath and South Westmeath, each returning 1 member. The parliamentary constituencies contain 10,443 electors.

Westminster.—parl. bor., met. bor., and city, on N. bank of river Thames, in W. of co. of London—parl. bor., 824 ac., pop. 50,790; met. bor., 2503 ac., pop. 183,011. The met. limits include the pars. of St. James Westminster, St. Margaret, and St. John Westminster, St. George Hanover Square, St. Anne Westminster, St. Martin in the Fields, &c. Westminster is the seat of Government and the residence of royalty, and contains, besides Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, St. James's Palace, Buckingham Palace, &c. It was formerly separated from the city of London by Temple Bar. It owes its origin to a market and fair granted to the abbot and convent of Westminster Abbey in 1259. It was made a separate diocese at the suppression of religious houses, but was re-incorporated with the diocese of London in 1550. It was made a parl. bor. in the time of Edward VI.; it returns 3 members to Parliament (3 divisions—viz., Hanover Square, Abbey, and Strand, 1 member for each division); its representation was increased from 2 to 3 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies contain 7306 electors.

Westmorland, co. in N. of England; formerly part of the British Kingdom of Cumbria (or Southern Strathclyde), afterwards with Cumberland forming part of Scotland until the reign of William II. of England; bounded NW. and N. by Cumberland, NE. by Durham, E. by Yorksh., and S. and SW. by Lancashire and Morecambe Bay; greatest length, N. and S., 35 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 40 miles; area, 505,330 ac., pop. 64,409; the parliamentary constituencies contain 12,933 electors. The co. is served by the L. & NW. R., M. R., N. E. R., and partly by the Furness Ry. Westmorland presents a continuous succession of mountain, moor, and fell, intersected by deep winding vales, traversed by numerous streams. The principal of these are the Eden, Lowther, Lune, and Kent, the last forming the broad estuary which terminates in Morecambe Bay. The mountains consist of various ridges belonging to the Pennine and Cumbrian chains. Helvellyn, on the Cumberland border, rises to a height of 3118 ft. The western part of the co. is within the Lake District, and contains Hawes Water, Grasmere, Rydal Water, and Ullswater on the Cumberland border, and Windermere on the Lancashire border. The climate is moist. The arable land is mostly confined to the valleys, where the soil usually consists of a dry gravelly loam, well adapted for turnips, but the greater part of the co. is natural pasture. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) A few tracts of woodland remain of the forests which formerly clothed all the hills. The mineral productions include graphite, marble, roofing slate, and some coal, lead, iron, and barytes. The only mfrs. of any consequence are the coarse woollens of Kendal. It comprises 115 pars., the mun. bors. of Appleby (co. town) and Kendal, and the urb. dists. of Ambleside, Bowness on Windermere, Grasmere, Kirkby Lonsdale, and Windermere. It is entirely in the diocese of Carlisle. For parl. purposes it is divided into 2 divisions—viz., Northern or Appleby, and Southern or Kendal, 1 member for each division.

Wexford.—a maritime co. of Leinster province, Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Wicklow, E. by St. George's Channel, S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by cos. Waterford, Kilkenny, and Carlow; greatest length, from Hook Head NE. to Croghan Mountain, 54 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 30 miles; average breadth, 20 miles; coast line, about 90 miles; area, 576,757 ac. (3714 water), or 2.8 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 104,104, of whom 95,434 or 91.7 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 7859 or 7.5 Episcopalians, 271 or 0.3 Presbyterians, and 342 or 0.3 Methodists. The co. is served by the D. W. & W. R. and G. S. & W. Ry. The coast is low and dangerous from sandbanks; the principal openings are Wexford Harbour, Ballyteige Bay, Bannow Bay, and Waterford Harbour; the chief promontories are Cahore Point, Greenore Point, Carnsore Point, and Hook Head; the Saltee Islands lie off the S. coast. The surface for the most part is level; Mount Leinster (2610 ft.), summit of Blackstairs mt. range, and other summits, rise along the border with co. Carlow; Mount Croghan is on the Wicklow border. The country generally has a verdant and luxuriant appearance; the soil is in some parts light ands andy, and in others of a stiff clay. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Clay-slate prevails almost everywhere, and limestone is much less abundant than in most parts of Ireland; marble is quarried near the banks of the Barrow. The principal rivers are the Slaney and the Barrow, both of which are navigable for a considerable distance. The fisheries are extensive, the chief districts being Gorey (Courtown) and Wexford. The co. comprises 138 pars. and 7 parts of pars.; and the towns of Wexford, New Ross, Enniscorthy, and Gorey. For parl. purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., North Wexford and South Wexford, each returning 1 member. The parliamentary constituencies contain 17,726 electors.—2. Wexford, seaport, mun. bor., and the capital, co. Wexford, at mouth of river Slaney, on Wexford Harbour, with ry. sta., D. W. & W. R. and G. S. & W. R., 15 miles SE. of Enniscorthy and 92¾ miles S. of Dublin by rail; 481 ac., pop. 11,168. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Wexford was a settlement of the Danes in the 9th century; was taken by the English under Fitzstephen in the reign of Henry II.; was sacked by Cromwell in 1649; and was the headquarters of the insurgents in 1798. Several parts of the old walls and the ruins of ancient abbeys still remain. There are several convents and eminent educational institutions. The harbour is very capacious, but its entrance is impeded by a bar of sand; vessels, drawing not more than 10 ft. of water, can cross this bar; larger vessels anchor 9 miles SE. at Rosslare Harbour (which see), with which Wexford has railway connection. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Steamers sail weekly between Wexford and the ports of Bristol and Liverpool. The exports are considerable, and consist chiefly of agricultural produce, live stock, malt, and whisky. There is a shipbuilding yard; mfrs. of implements and cement. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the salmon, herring, and oyster fisheries. Wexford returned 1 member to Parliament until 1885.

2774; town, pop. 7911; P.O., T.O. Market day, Thursday. Wick consists of three portions—Wick proper (the oldest part), Louisburgh, and Pulteneytown, and is the seat of a very important and extensive fishery district. In November, 1902, Pulteneytown became part of the burgh of Wick and a combined town council was formed. The harbour has been enlarged and greatly improved, subsequent to 1883, at a cost of about £100,000, and a scheme will be gradually carried out with the object of still further increasing the amount of quay accommodation, water area, and shelter. The estimated cost is £150,000. There is regular steam communication with Aberdeen, Granton, Kirkwall, and Lerwick. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Fishing, particularly herring fishing, is the great industry. There are rope and sail factories, a distillery, and a brewery. The royal burgh, created in 1589, was extended in 1883. The Wick Burghs (Wick, Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty) return 1 member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 2799 electors. The Castle of Old Wick, or "The Auld Man o' Wick," is situated on a headland 1½ mile SW. of the town.

Wicklow.—a maritime co. of Leinster province, SE. Ireland; is bounded N. by co. Dublin, E. by St. George's Channel, S. by co. Wexford, and W. by cos. Carlow and Kildare; greatest length, N. and S., 40 miles; greatest breadth, 33 miles; average breadth, 18 miles; coast line, about 35 miles; area, 500,216 ac. (1413 water), or 2.4 per cent. of the total area of Ireland; pop. 60,824, of whom 48,083 or 79.1 per cent. are Roman Catholics, 11,354 or 18.7 Episcopalians, 502 or 0.8 Presbyterians, and 614 or 1.0 Methodists. The co. is served by the D. W. &. W. R. and G. S. & W. R. The coast is comparatively unbroken, and is rendered dangerous by sandbanks; the chief headlands are Bray Head, Wicklow Head, Mizen Head, and Arklow Head, and these project only a little distance. Nearly the entire surface is hilly, rising into mountain groups in the interior, where valleys, glens, and lakes afford the most romantic scenery; Lugnaquilia is the highest summit; alt., 3039 ft.; the most romantic glens or valleys are the Dargle and the Downs in the N., the Devil's Glen in the centre, and the Vale of Ovoca in the South. Roundwood reservoir, the source of the Dublin water supply, is in this county. Other large lakes are Loughs Bray, Luggela, Dan, and Glendalough. The rocks consist of granite, mica-slate, clay-slate, trap, and porphyry; lead and copper are obtained in the centre; gold has been found in the S.; and the exportation of pyrites containing sulphur, chiefly from the Ovoca district, has been very considerable. Cordite is manufactured at Arklow. The soil in the low tracts by the river courses is very fertile, but in general it is light and poor. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The principal rivers are the Slaney, the Ovoca, the Vartry, and the Liffey. The Murrough, a bank of shingle, extends along the coast from Wicklow to the vicinity of Greystones; the D. W. & W. R. runs along it. The fisheries are valuable, but have been comparatively neglected. The co. comprises 49 pars. and 11 parts of pars.; and the towns of Arklow, Bray, and Wicklow. For parliamentary purposes the county is divided into 2 divisions—viz., West Wicklow and East Wicklow—each returning 1 member. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 9342 electors.—2. Wicklow, market, assize, and seaport town, and cap. of its co., with ry. sta., D. W. & W. R., Drumkay, E. co. Wicklow, at mouth of river Vartry, which is here crossed by a bridge of 8 arches, 28¼ miles S. of Dublin by rail; 757 ac., pop. 3228; P.O., T.O. Market day, Saturday. Wicklow is situated at the S. extremity of a narrow creek, which is sheltered from the sea by a long peninsula, called the Murrough. A new harbour and pier enclosed by a breakwater have been constructed at a cost of £50,000. Large waterworks have also been built. Lead ores and explosives are the principal exports. The environs of Wicklow are very fine, and there are many seats in the neighbourhood. The ruin of Black Castle stands on an eminence near the mouth of the Vartry. Wicklow gives the title of earl to the Howards of Shelton Abbey.

Wigan is an ancient place, but has become of consequence only since the rise of the cotton mfr. Its position in the midst of a great and rich coalfield, and its easy means of transit by railway and canal, have given it peculiar facilities for mfrs., which consist chiefly of calicoes, checks, fustians, and other cotton fabrics. It has also linen works, iron foundries, iron forges, iron rolling mills, railway waggon works, chemical works, breweries, &c. Some of its cotton mills and iron works are among the largest in the kingdom. The original parish church of All Saints dates from the 14th century. A public park of 30 acres was opened in 1878. Wigan was a borough by prescription, first chartered by Henry III. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from the time of Edward VI. until 1885. The parliamentary constituency contains 8522 electors. The Roman station Coccium was either at or close to Wigan.

Wight, Isle of, Hants, and admin. co. of itself, in the English Channel, from which it is separated by Spithead and the Solent; greatest length, E. and W., from Bembridge Point to the Needles, 23 m.; greatest breadth, N. and S., from Cowes to St. Catherine's Point, 13 m.; area, 94,068 ac., pop. 82,418. From E. to W. the island is divided into two parts by a range of downs, which form excellent sheep walks; the northern part is wooded, and the soil is generally a stiff cold clay, while the southern part has far less timber, and the soil is a fertile sandy loam. From S. to N., again, the island is divided by the river Medina. The Isle of Wight was invaded, A.D. 43, by the Romans, who retained possession of it till 530, when it was reduced by Cedric the Saxon. The Conqueror conferred on William Fitz-Osborne the lordship of the island, which continued to be governed by its independent lords till 1293, when the regalities were purchased by Edward I. Since that time it has been governed by wardens, appointed by the Crown, but the office has become honorary. Cement is manufactured, and largely exported. The island is served by the I. o. W. R. and the I. o. W. C. R. The mildness of the climate (especially in the district known as the Undercliff), and the beauty of the scenery, have made the Isle of Wight a great resort of invalids, and a favourite place of residence. Newport is the chief town, and the seat of the County Council. Cowes is the principal port, and Ryde and Cowes are important yachting centres. Off the W. extremity are the Needles Rocks. The other places of note are Bembridge, Brading, Freshwater, Sandown, Shanklin, Ventnor, and Yarmouth. The most interesting antiquities are Carisbrooke Castle and the remains of Quarr Abbey. Osborne, a former royal residence, is now a Convalescent Home for officers of both services. The Isle of Wight returns 1 member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 14,654 electors.

The Wigtown District of parliamentary burghs (Wigtown, Whithorn, New Galloway, and Stranraer) returned 1 member until 1885, when its representation was merged in that of the county.

Wigtown Bay, between Wigtownshire and Kirkcudbrightshire, penetrates 9 miles, and has an average breadth of 3 miles; receives the rivers Cree and Bladenoch, and has large sandbanks.

Wigtownshire, a maritime co. in SW. extremity of Scotland, forming the W. division of Galloway; is bounded N. by Ayrshire and the mouth of the Firth of Clyde, E. by Kirkcudbrightshire, S. by the Irish Sea, and W. by the Irish Channel; greatest length, E. and W., 30 miles; greatest breadth, N. and S., 28 miles; area, 486.9 sq. m. or 311,609 ac.; civ. co., pop. 32,685 or 67 persons to each sq. m.; admin. co., pop. 24,012. The coast, about 120 miles in extent, is for the most part bold and rocky; the chief headlands are Burrow Head, the Mull of Galloway (the most southerly land in Scotland), and Corsewall Point. The interior is divided into three great districts—the double peninsula W. of Loch Ryan and Luce Bay, known as the Rhinns of Galloway; the peninsula between Luce Bay and Wigtown, called the Machers; and the Moors, in the N. of the co. The surface is mostly low and moderately level, except in the Moors, which are hilly, and abound in mosses. There is much excellent arable land in the Rhinns and the Machers. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The chief streams are the Cree, which flows along the E. boundary, the Bladenoch, and Luce Water. Wigtownshire is served by the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire Joint Ry. and by the G. & SW. Ry. Lochs are numerous, but small. Agriculture, dairy-farming, and sheep-farming afford the chief employments. Kirkcowan has a woollen factory and Stranraer has engineering works. The co. comprises 17 pars., the burghs of Newton-Stewart, Stranraer, and Whithorn, and the royal burgh of Wigtown. It returns 1 member to Parliament. The parliamentary constituency contains 5353 electors.

Market day, Wednesday. Wilton has been celebrated for its carpets since the time of Elizabeth. It takes its name from its position on the Wiley, and gives name to the county, Wilts. It was the capital of Wessex, had an abbey of about 800 (the site of which is now occupied by Wilton House, seat of the Earl of Pembroke), and was the seat of a diocese from 906 until 1050. It was a borough by prescription, first chartered by Henry I. It returned 2 members to Parliament from Edward I. until 1832, and 1 member from 1832 (when its parliamentary limits were extended) until 1885. Fairs are held in May and September, the latter being one of the largest sheep fairs in the west of England.—2. Wilton, hamlet, Cumberland, 2 miles E. of Egremont.—3. Wilts and Berks Canal, commencing at Semington, Wilts, and flowing NE. past Melksham, Chippenham, Wootton-Bassett, Swindon, Shrivenham, and Wantage, to the Thames at Abingdon. It is 52 miles long and has 41 locks.

Wiltshire, or Wilts, co., in SW. of England, bounded NW. and N. by Gloucestershire, E. by Berks and Hants, S. by Hants and Dorset, and W. by Somerset; greatest length, N. and S., 53 miles; greatest breadth, E. and W., 37 miles; area—civ. co., 879,943 ac., pop. 273,869; admin. co., 864,105 ac., pop. 271,394; is served by the G. W. R., L. & SW. R., and M. & SW. Junction. The county is divided into 2 divisions by the Vale of Pewsey extending E. and W., the northern principally a fertile flat rising near the N. border in the direction of the Cotswold Hills, the southern a varied district broken by downs and intersected by fertile and well-watered valleys. To the northern division belong the Marlborough Downs, and in the southern division is Salisbury Plain. The principal rivers are the Upper Avon, flowing SW. to the Bristol Channel; the Lower Avon (with its tributaries the Wiley, Nadder, and Bourne), flowing S. to the English Channel; and the Kennet, flowing E. to the Thames. The greater part of the surface is kept in pasture, devoted in the northern division to grazing and dairy farming, and in the southern division to the rearing of sheep. Wiltshire is famous for its bacon and cheese. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The geological strata are principally cretaceous, forming part of the central chalk district of England. Ironstone is abundant. The principal mfrs. are woollens and carpets at Bradford, Trowbridge, Westbury, and Wilton; cutlery and steel goods at Salisbury; ironfounding at Devizes; and ropes and sacking at Marlborough. The training of dogs for truffle-hunting is a curious industry peculiar to the county. The locomotive and carriage works of the Great Western Railway are at Swindon; near Downton is a College of Agriculture, and at W. Lavington is another. Wiltshire is especially remarkable for the number and variety of the memorials of antiquity left by Britons, Romans, Saxons, and Danes, the chief of these being the megalithic remains of Stonehenge and Avebury. The co. contains 335 pars., the parl. and mun. bor. of Salisbury (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Calne, Chippenham, Devizes, Malmesbury, Marlborough, Swindon, and Wilton. It is mostly in the diocese of Salisbury. The capital is Salisbury, but assizes for the co. are also held at Devizes. For parl. purposes it is divided into 5 divisions—viz., Northern or Cricklade, North-Western or Chippenham, Western or Westbury, Eastern or Devizes, and Southern or Wilton, 1 member for each division; its representation was increased from 4 to 5 members in 1885. The parl. constituencies contain 48,687 electors.

R., Surrey, at the NE. extremity of Wimbledon Common, 7½ miles SW. of Waterloo sta., London, by rail; urb. dist. and par., 3221 ac., pop. 41,652. Good residences, chiefly modern villas, are numerous, many families having been attracted to Wimbledon by the salubrity of the climate, Wimbledon Common being the most breezy bit of open country adjoining London. The town is in two halves, the modern residential part being on the hill (the site of the old village), while "New Wimbledon," the working men's quarter, lies below, mostly S. of the railway. There is a golfing course on the Common; here the National Rifle Association held its annual meeting until 1889, since when this meeting has been transferred to Bisley. At the S. of the Common there was formerly an entrenched camp.

R., Gloucestershire, on river Isborne, under the Cotswolds, 6¾ miles NE. of Cheltenham; par., 6720 ac., pop. 2699; P.O., T.O., called Winchcombe. Market day, Saturday. The town was known at Domesday as Wincelcombe, and ranked as a manorial incorporation. The church is ancient. There are a town hall, a mechanics' institute, a reading-room, and two endowed schools. The industrial establishments include a silk factory, a papermill, a tanyard, and flour mills. Fairs for horses are held in March and July, and a cattle fair in May.

Winchcombe Park, seat, near Shaftesbury, Dorset.

Winchelsea, St. Thomas the Apostle, par. and ancient town (W.) with ry. sta., SE. & C. R., Sussex, 3 miles SW. of Rye and 8 miles NE. of Hastings; par., 798 ac., pop. 157; P.O., T.O. In Saxon times Winchelsea was one of the principal southern ports, and retained its importance until the 13th century, when it suffered from three inundations, by the last of which it was completely destroyed. The new town of Winchelsea was founded by Edward I. on Iham Hill, about 3 miles NW. of the old town. It suffered at various periods between 1359 and 1449 from attacks by the French; and the gradual withdrawal of the sea ultimately destroyed its harbour. It sent 2 members to Parliament from the time of Edward III. until 1832, when it was included in the parl. limits of Rye. It still has a Mayor and an ancient unreformed corporation, but without muncipal powers; in other respects it is only a village with parish council. Winchelsea gives the title of earl to the family of Finch-Hatton.

R., Hants, on river Itchin, 12 miles NE. of Southampton and 66 SW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 1049 ac., pop. 19,001; mun. bor. and par., 1931 ac., pop. 20,929. The parliamentary constituency contains 2806 electors. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Winchester was the Caer Gwent of the Britons, the Venta Belgarum of the Romans, and the Wintanceaster of the Saxons, under whom it became the capital of England; it was frequently the meeting-place of parliaments until the time of Henry VII., but its prosperity was greatly injured, first by the removal of the Court to London, and afterwards, on the dissolution of the monasteries, by the demolition of many of its religious establishments. It is the county town of Hampshire, the County Assizes being held there three times a year. The diocese of Winchester dates from the 7th century. The cathedral was first completed in 648, but the present structure, one of the largest, the longest, and in the interior one of the most magnificent in England, was built 1079–93. Other objects of interest are Winchester College, the famous public school, founded by William of Wykeham in 1387; the hospital of St. Cross, founded by Bishop de Blois in 1132; the old castle hall, which has been restored, and the assize courts adjoining; and Wren's unfinished royal palace (1683), used for infantry barracks but destroyed by fire in 1894. Winchester was at one time an important seat of the woollen trade. A seed fair is held in February and a cattle, horse, and sheep fair in October. A race-meeting is held in July on the downs NW. of the town. It was constituted a guild under royal protection in the 9th century (100 years earlier than any other on record), and received its first regular charter of incorporation from Henry II. in 1184. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from Edward I. until 1885.

Windermere, Westmorland and Lancashire; is 10½ m. long N. and S., 1 m. broad, 219 ft. deep, and 134 ft. above sea-level; receives the Troutlebeck, and the Rothay and Brathay, and gives off the Leven, which flows to Morecambe Bay; its surface is diversified by numerous small islands. It is the largest sheet of fresh water in England, and on this account, as well as from the beauty of its scenery, it is often styled the Queen of the Lakes. Steamers ply from Ambleside at the head to Newby Bridge at the foot of Windermere.—2. Windermere, formerly Winandermere, urb. dist., small town, and par., with ry. sta., L. & NW. R., Westmorland—urb. dist. and par., 8924 ac., pop. 2379; town, at E. shore of Lake Windermere, 4 miles SE. of Ambleside and 8¼ miles NW. of Kendal; P.O., T.O. The town is situated amidst most picturesque scenery, and has risen since the opening of the railway in 1847, prior to which period the place was only a hamlet called Birthwaite. There are several fine villas, a large hotel, a neat parish church, and a high-class school called St. Mary's College. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Windsor (properly called New Windsor, to distinguish it from the ancient village of Old Windsor, 2 miles SE.) is situated on the right bank of the Thames, and communicates by a short bridge of one arch with Eton, which is included in the parl. bor. and forms one town with Windsor. In the High Street is the fine Jubilee statue of Queen Victoria. It has barracks for cavalry and infantry, but it owes all its importance to the Castle, which is the principal royal residence in the kingdom. Windsor Castle stands to the E. of the town, on a lofty chalk bluff which overhangs the bend of the river. The oldest part of the present castle dates from Edward III.; it has been added to and improved by almost every successive sovereign. Its principal features are the Round Tower, the great terraces, the old State apartments, and St. George's Chapel, where the Knights of the Garter are installed, and in vaults of which lie Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VIII., and Charles I. The Albert Memorial Chapel, formerly known as Wolsey's Chapel, contains the tombs of the Duke of Albany, the Duke of Clarence, and the Prince Consort cenotaph. The parks contain many ancient and famous trees. In the Little or Home Park (400 ac.) is Frogmore, with the mausoleum of the Prince Consort; here the late Queen Victoria was interred. Close at hand is the mausoleum of the Duchess of Kent. In the Great Park (nearly 18,000 ac.) are the Long Walk (an avenue of elms, 3 miles in length, running to Snow Hill, on which is an equestrian statue of George III.), Cumberland Lodge, and Virginia Water, the largest artificial lake in England. Windsor was incorporated by Edward I. It returns 1 member to Parl.; it regularly returned 2 members from Henry VI. until 1867. The parliamentary constituency contains 3138 electors.

Wolverhampton stands on the summit of an eminence, amid a network of railways and canals. It is of ancient origin, and had a religious house of the 10th century, founded by Wulfrun—hence the name. It remained small and obscure until recent times, when it increased rapidly in population and wealth; it is now the largest manufacturing town in the county, and is known as the Metropolis of the Black Country. Situated in the heart of the great midland mining district, with extensive beds of coal and ironstone in its vicinity, it possesses enormous iron foundries, where articles of every description of ironware are produced. Steel, brass, tin, papier mâche, and japanned wares are also extensively made, with galvanised ironware, chemicals, colours, varnishes, &c. Wolverhampton has long been noted for its locks and keys. It possesses many fine public buildings, among which are the collegiate church of St. Peter, and a Roman Catholic chapel designed by Pugin. Congreve and Abernethy were educated at the grammar school (1515). There is an art gallery with school of art attached; the free library was erected to commemorate the 60th year of the reign of her late Majesty Queen Victoria. Wolverhampton was made a parliamentary borough in 1832, a municipal borough in 1848, and a co. bor. in 1888. It returns 3 members to Parliament (3 divisions—viz., West, East, and South, 1 member for each division); its representation was increased from 2 to 3 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies contain 31,532 electors.

Woolwich, parl. bor., met. bor., and par., with ry. stas. (Arsenal, Dockyard), SE. & C. R., co. of London, on river Thames, 8 miles E. of London by rail—parl. bor., 8299 ac., pop. 117,170; met. bor. (including also Eltham and Plumstead pars), 8276 ac., pop. 117,178; par., 1130 ac., pop. 41,625. The chief feature of Woolwich is the arsenal, one of the most extensive and complete establishments of the kind in the world. It is 4 miles in circumference, and is divided into the carriage, gun factory, laboratory, torpedo factory, saddlery, and ordnance departments. The arsenal was transferred from Moorfields to Woolwich in 1716. The dockyard dates from the reign of Henry VIII., but it never attained to first rank among English naval yards, and has been closed since 1869; it is now used as a depôt for military stores. Almost the only buildings of interest are the military establishments, such as the military academy, the Rotunda or military museum, the barracks of the artillery and of the marine and royal engineers, the soldiers' home, the ordnance hospital, and the Herbert hospital on the W. slope of Shooter's Hill. Beside the marine barracks is a naval hospital. Military exercises and reviews are held on Woolwich Common; and at the practice range, on the marshes to the E., all cannon and new inventions in artillery are proved. There is a free ferry from Woolwich pier to North Woolwich. Woolwich returns 1 member to Parliament; it was made a parliamentary borough in 1885, prior to which it was mostly included in the old parliamentary limits of Greenwich. The parliamentary constituency contains 16,136 electors.

Worcester, parl. and co. bor., city, county town of Worcestershire, and county of itself, with ry. stas. (Shrub Hill), Jt. G. W. and M. R., and (Foregate Street), G. W. R., 22 miles SW. of Birmingham and 120 miles NW. of London by rail; parl. and co. bor. and par., 3178 ac., pop. 46,624. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Worcester is finely situated in a beautiful vale on the left bank of the Severn, over which is an elegant stone bridge of 5 arches. Successively a British fort, a Roman camp, and a Saxon stronghold, it is one of the most ancient cities in England. The cathedral, a fine specimen of Gothic architecture, in the form of a double cross, was built in 680, and rebuilt in the beginning of the 13th century. Besides the cathedral there are numerous churches, some of them very old. The cathedral grammar school was founded by Henry VIII.; the free grammar school received its charter from Queen Elizabeth in 1561. The museum of natural history is said to be one of the finest out of London. There are porcelain works, British wine and vinegar works, chemical and manure works, railway signal works, and iron foundries; but the leading industry is the mfr. of gloves, of which Worcester is the chief seat in England. An annual fair is held in September and a Christmas stock fair in December. The hop market is one of the largest in the kingdom. The trade by the river is very considerable. The musical festival of the "Three Choirs" is held here every three years alternately with Hereford and Gloucester. The most remarkable event in the history of the place is the decisive victory which Cromwell gained here over the Royalist forces in 1651, and which he termed his "crowning mercy." Worcester was chartered by Richard I. It returns 1 member to Parliament; it returned 2 members from Edward I. until 1885. The parliamentary constituency contains 7852 electors.

Worcestershire, west-midland co. of England, bounded N. by Shropshire and Staffordshire, E. by Warwickshire, S. by Gloucestershire, and W. by Herefordshire; greatest length (not including detached portions), NW. and SE., 37 miles; greatest breadth, NE. and SW., 45 miles; area—civ. co., 480,560 ac., pop. 488,338; admin. co. (with 2 co. bors.), 480,059 ac., pop. 453,734. The co. is served by the G. W. R. and M. R. Worcestershire lies almost entirely in the basin of the Severn, which receives the Stour, Teme, and Avon. The surface is a broad undulating plain, broken in the NE. by hills of moderate height, and in the SW. by the Malvern Hills, which reach in Worcestershire Beacon, an altitude of 1395 ft. The soil, chiefly clay and loam, is very fertile. Wheat is extensively grown, and there are numerous hop-gardens and orchards. There are several extensive and beautiful valleys (notably that of the Severn), with rich pastures, and great numbers of cattle and sheep are fattened. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The strata consist for the most part of new red sandstone, lias, and oolite; other formations are visible in the Malvern Hills and some other districts. Coal and iron are found in the Dudley district, and the mfr. of iron and steel and of hardware is extensive; carpets and rugs are made at Kidderminster, glass at Dudley and Stourbridge, gloves and porcelain at Worcester, and needles and fish-hooks at Redditch and Feckenham. Immense quantities of salt are obtained from the brine springs at Droitwich; it is also worked at Bromsgrove. The Birmingham and Worcester and other canals connect the Severn basin with those of the Trent and Mersey. Worcestershire suffered much during the Civil War owing to its attachment to the Royalist cause. The county contains 239 pars., part of the parl. bor. of Birmingham, the parl. and co. bor. of Worcester, the parl. and mun. bor. of Kidderminster (1 member), part of the parl. and co. bor. of Dudley (1 member), and the mun. bors. of Bewdley, Droitwich, and Evesham. It is almost entirely in the diocese of Worcester. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 5 divisions—viz., Western or Bewdley, Southern or Evesham, Mid or Droitwich, Northern, and Eastern, 1 member for each division; the parliamentary representation was increased from 4 to 5 members in 1885. The parliamentary constituencies together contain 61,988 electors.

In the time of Henry VIII. Workington was a fishing village. Its prosperity commenced with the opening of coal mines in the reign of Elizabeth. Its industrial establishments comprise large iron-smelting works, and works for steel rails, iron bridges, &c. There is a papermill. It has also some shipbuilding, and it carries on a considerable shipping trade. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) The harbour was improved by the construction of a breakwater in 1873. Numerous stock and cattle sales are held besides the weekly market. Workington Rural, par., adjoining above; 1715 ac., pop. 236. Workington Hall gave shelter to Mary Queen of Scots on her flight from Langside in 1568.

Yarm, market town and par. with ry. sta., N. E. R., N. R. Yorkshire, on river Tees, 4 miles SW. of Stockton; 1199 ac., pop. 1597; P.O., T.O. Market day, Thursday. Yarm had a black priory of 13th century, on the site of which is a modern mansion called the Fryerage. The trade of the place has declined on account of its proximity to Stockton. It exports agricultural produce, and shares with Stockton in the salmon fishing in the Tees. Fairs are held in April, August, and October.

Yarmouth, seaport and par. with ry. sta., I. o. W. C. R., Isle of Wight, at mouth of river Yar, 10 miles W. of Newport; 58 ac., pop. 948; P.O., T.O. Yarmouth was anciently called Eremuth, and was once a place of some importance, being much frequented as a port of communication with the mainland. It suffered severely from the French in 1277 and 1524, and in 1539 was protected by a castle, now a semicircular battery, armed with four guns. Yarmouth was early made a chartered incorporation, and it sent 2 members to Parliament from the time of Elizabeth till 1832. The trade of the place consists in the importation of cattle, coals, slate, and iron. A pier, with 3 landing-stages, 700 ft. long, was opened in 1876.

Yarmouth, Great, parl. and co. bor., par., seaport, fishing town, and watering-place, with ry. stas., G. E. R. (South Town, Vauxhall), M. & G. N. Jt. R. (Beach), Norfolk, at mouth of river Yare, at influx of river Bure, 19 miles E. of Norwich and 121 miles NE. of London by rail—parl. and co. bor. (containing also Gorleston and Runham Vauxhall pars.), 3568 ac., pop. 51,316; par., 1375 ac., pop. 35,371. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Yarmouth is the chief seat of the English herring fishery. This industry alone employs several thousand people. The deep-sea fishing is also actively prosecuted, and the produce is forwarded daily to London by railway. The harbour, in the Yare, admits vessels of 900 tons. The quays stretch along the river upwards of a mile. The exports are agricultural produce, malt, herrings, and other fish. (For shipping statistics, see APPENDIX.) Shipbuilding is carried on. Yarmouth has recently risen into considerable importance as a watering-place. "The Rows" are a quaint feature of the town, and consist of 145 narrow streets all built at right angles to the sea. The sea-frontage has a fine esplanade, with two piers and beach gardens; there is a revolving tower. The chief architectural feature of the town is the church of St. Nicholas (13th century) with the widest nave of any church in the kingdom. The Nelson monument is an elegant column 144 ft. high. Has coastguard and lifeboat station. On the sandhills to the N. of the town are extensive golf links. On the south pier head are two fixed lights, each visible 5 miles; on the north is an occulting light. Yarmouth appears first on record in 1081; was long a mere fishing village; was fortified in the time of Henry III. and subsequent sovereigns; was occupied by the Parliamentarians in the Civil War, and its fortifications demolished; and was a naval station during the great war with France. It received borough rights of its own from King John. Great Yarmouth, which returned 2 members to Parliament from Edward II. until 1667, was revived as a parl. bor., with 1 member, in 1885; its parl. limits include the whole of the mun. bor. (with Gorleston) and part of the parish of Runham. The parliamentary constituency contains 8624 electors.

Yordas Cave, on SW. side of Whernside, N. div. W. R. Yorkshire, 4 miles N. of Ingleton; has an apartment 180 ft. long and 60 high, adorned with stalactites and stalagmites, beyond which is a circular apartment with a small cascade.

York, parl. and co. bor., archiepiscopal city, county town of Yorkshire, and county in itself, in the Ainsty of York, a district wholly outside the three Ridings, with ry. sta., N. E. R.; also served by the following six foreign companies:—G. N. R., L. & NW., M. R., L. & Y., G. E., and G. C. R.; 188 miles NW. of London by rail—parl. bor., 3591 ac., pop. 75,521; co. bor., 3730 ac., pop. 77,914. Market days, Thursday and Saturday. The city of York is pleasantly situated in a wide and fertile vale, at a point where the three Ridings meet, and where the Foss joins the Ouse, which is here navigable. The Foss is crossed by five bridges and the Ouse by three. Probably York is the most ancient city of the British Empire, and possibly of Europe. Before the arrival of the Romans it was an important settlement and capital of the Brigantes, and was called Caer Errak. Subsequently, it was for 400 years the capital (Eboracum) of Roman Britain. After the Roman occupation York became the capital of the N. English sub-kingdom of Bernicia, then the capital of the kingdom of Northumbria when it was called Eoforwic, and by the Danes Iorvik, whence its present name. The ancient part of the city is enclosed by walls, and entered by 4 principal gates or Bars, the finest being Micklegate Bar. The walls, originally Roman, but restored by Edward I., are still for the most part in good preservation, and have been converted into promenades. The chief architectural feature of York is the minster or cathedral, the finest ecclesiastical edifice in England. As it now exists, it was begun in 1171 and completed in 1472. It is cruciform in shape, with central tower and 2 western towers. Here were celebrated the marriages of Alexander III. of Scotland to Margaret, daughter of Henry III., and of Edward III. to Philippa of Hainault. Besides the cathedral there are numerous ancient churches and chapels, some of them worthy of notice, as are also the Roman Catholic pro-cathedral of St. Wilfrid (1864), and the ruins of the mitred abbey of St. Mary (11th century). Among other buildings are the Guild Hall, the Mansion House, the castle, occupied as assize courts and county prison, and the station (1877), one of the finest in the kingdom, London excepted. York is the most important railway centre in Great Britain. There are large cavalry barracks near Fulford. The only public recreation ground is the common of Knavesmire, where the races are held; there are beautiful walks and an esplanade by the river side. The trade of York is now mostly local, and the industries are not important, but they include to some extent iron-castings, bottles, combs, gloves, leather, and confectionery. In 624, Edwin, King of Northumbria, made it an archiepiscopal see. In the 8th century it was famous for its diocesan school, and it continued to make a distinguished figure in English history until the Civil War, when it was taken by the Parliamentarians after a siege of 13 weeks. Its decline commenced with the Wars of the Roses and the Pilgrimage of Grace, but it still ranks second among English cities, and gives its chief magistrate the title of Lord Mayor. Its first charter of incorporation was granted by Henry I.; important events in its municipal history were the extension of the city boundaries in 1884 and in 1893. It has sent 2 members to Parliament since Henry III.; its parliamentary limits were extended in 1885, so as to include so much of the mun. bor. as was not included in the parl. bor. The parliamentary constituencies contain 13,369 electors.

Yorkshire, maritime county of England; bounded N. by Durham and the Tees, NE. and E. by the North Sea, S. by the Humber and Lincolnshire, Notts, and Derbyshire, SW. by Cheshire, W. by Lancashire, and NW. by Westmorland; length, E. and W., 96 miles; breadth, 80 miles; area, 3,882,328 ac., pop. 3,584,762. Yorkshire is the first county of England in point of size. The co. is served by the N. E. R., M. R., G. C. R., G. N. R., L. & Y. R., H. B. & W. R. R., L. & NW. R., and joint lines of the foregoing companies. From the mouth of the Tees to Flamborough Head the coast is bold and rocky; from Flamborough Head to Spurn Head it lies low. The interior presents the appearance of a great central valley, known as the Vale of York, stretching SE. to the Humber, and flanked on either side by heights—on the E. by the Cleveland Hills and the Wolds, and on the W. by the Pennine chain. The Humber receives almost all the drainage of the county by the Ouse, with its tributaries the Swale, Ure, Derwent, Wharfe, Nidd, Aire, and Don. A small part of the west is drained by the Ribble, of the north by the Tees, and of the east by the North Sea. The general geological formation is limestone and coal in the west, succeeded towards the east by lias, oolite, and chalk. Yorkshire takes high rank as an agricultural, manufacturing, and mining county. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) It is well supplied with every means of communication. It has from an early period been divided into 3 Ridings—viz., East, North, and West, besides the Ainsty of York which surrounds the city. Each Riding has a lord-lieutenant and a separate court of quarter sessions and a commission of the peace, and statistically is treated as a distinct county; the West Riding has also its own Assizes. It contains 1586 pars. (including 37 in the co. bors.); the parl. and co. bors. of Bradford (3 members), Halifax (2 members), Huddersfield (1 member), Sheffield (5 members), Kingston upon Hull (3 members), Leeds (5 members), Middlesbrough (1 member); and the parl. and mun. bors. of Dewsbury (1 member), Pontefract (1 member), Scarborough (1 member), Wakefield (1 member), and York (2 members), and part of the parl. bor. of Stockton on Tees; and the mun. bors. of Barnsley, Batley, Beverley, Bridlington, Brighouse, Doncaster, Harrogate, Hedon, Keighley, Morley, Ossett, Pudsey, Richmond, Ripon, Rotherham, Thornaby on Tees, and Todmorden. It is in the dioceses of York, Ripon, and Manchester. For parliamentary purposes it is divided into 26 divisions—viz. (East-Riding), Holderness, Buckrose, and Howdenshire; (North-Riding), Thirsk and Malton, Richmond, Cleveland, and Whitby; (N. div. West-Riding), Skipton, Keighley, Shipley, Sowerby, and Elland); (E. div. West-Riding), Ripon, Otley, Barkston Ash, Osgoldcross, Pudsey, and Spen Valley; (S. div. West-Riding), Morley, Normanton, Colne Valley, Holmfirth, Barnsley, Hallamshire, Rotherham, and Doncaster—1 member for each division. The representation of Yorkshire was increased from 10 to 26 members in 1885.

Yorkshire, East-Riding, in the SE. of the county; is separated from the North-Riding by the Derwent (excepting the line drawn from Filey for a distance of 8 m. to that river), and from the West-Riding by the Ouse; on the E. it is bounded by the North Sea, and on the S. by the Humber; area, 750,039 ac., pop. 385,007. The principal industries are the agricultural. Fine crops of wheat, beans, and hay are grown on the level tracts of Holderness and the banks of the Humber, and of barley and turnips on the Wolds, where the soil is a light, friable, calcareous loam. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) Industries other than agricultural are carried on principally at Beverley and Hull, the latter of which is a great seaport. The parliamentary constituencies contain 29,494 electors.

Yorkshire, North-Riding, occupies the N. of the county, between the East-Riding and the county of Durham, and is separated from the West-Riding by the Ouse, the valley of the Ure, and the hills above Wharfedale; area, 1,362,378 ac., pop. 377,338. The principal rivers are the Derwent, which separates the North-Riding from the East-Riding, with its tributary the Rye; the Tees, which separates the North-Riding from Durham; and the Swale and the Ure, which unite to form the Ouse. The Vale of York, along the rivers Swale and Ouse, divides the eastern moorlands from the western. In the western moorlands the picturesque dells are mostly in pasture. The eastern moorlands contain several beautiful dales, including the Vale of Cleveland and the fertile Vale of the Rye. The best land is found in the Vale of York. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The mountain limestone yields valuable lead deposits, and alum and jet are obtained at Whitby. Salt is extracted from brine at Middlesbrough and Cargo Fleet. Valuable beds of ironstone exist in the Cleveland Hills, and iron smelting and other allied industries are carried on on a vast scale at Middlesbrough, which is also a considerable seaport; Scarborough is one of the great watering-places. The capital of the Riding is Northallerton, where the County Council sits, but the Assizes for both the N. and E. Ridings together are held at York. The parliamentary constituencies contain 45,801 electors.

York Cottage, seat of the Prince of Wales, Sandringham, King's Lynn, Norfolk.

Yorkshire, West-Riding, in W. and SW. of co.; area, 1,771,562 ac., pop. 2,750,493. The surface rises towards the W. and NW., reaching in Whernside Mountain an alt. of 2414 ft. The principal rivers are the Ribble, Nidd, Calder, Don, Aire, and Wharfe. The West-Riding is the seat of Yorkshire industrial enterprise. The great Yorkshire coalfield, on which all the staple mfrs. of the Riding are situated, is a space 45 miles by 20 miles, between the Aire and the Don. Some of the leading branches of national industry have long had their seat in the West-Riding—woollens at Leeds, Bradford, Halifax, Dewsbury, and Huddersfield; linens at Leeds and Barnsley; and hardware, cutlery, and plated goods at Sheffield. There are mineral waters at Harrogate, Knaresborough, and Ilkley Wells. On the N. and E. sides corn and other crops are largely grown; and in the NW., round Settle and Skipton, it is all grass and dairy land. (For agricultural statistics, see APPENDIX.) The electorate contains 264,327 electors (Northern part, 66,661; Southern part, 121,581; and Eastern part, 76,085). The County Council and County Offices are at Wakefield, but the Assizes for the Riding are held at Leeds.

Youghal (pronounced Yawl) is a place of great antiquity, received its first charter from King John in 1209, and was the headquarters of Cromwell in 1649. Sir Walter Raleigh was mayor of Youghal in 1588, and his mansion, now called Myrtle Grove, is still occupied as a residence. More than half of the old walls are still standing, including the Water Gate, by which Cromwell entered the town. The harbour is safe and commodious, but the entrance is obstructed by a bar. The port has become a sub-port to Cork. The exports consist chiefly of agricultural produce, bricks, and earthenware. The salmon fishery is of considerable value. Youghal returned 1 member to Parliament until 1885. Youghal Bay, which includes Youghal Harbour, extends 6 miles NE. and SW. between Ram Head in co. Waterford and Knockadoon Head in co. Cork. On W. side of entrance is a lighthouse 78 ft. above high water with fixed light visible 6 miles.

ETYMOLOGY OF BRITISH PLACE-NAMES

THE following Glossary contains the principal components of the place-names in the British Isles, and with its aid the derivation of many names may be ascertained, and something may be learned of the physical condition of various localities in early times. In the Highlands of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, where the names are almost all Gaelic (Cymric), and in the Lake District where Norse names predominate, less doubt need be felt as to the correctness of the interpretations than in parts of England and Scotland where Celts, Romans, Scandinavians, Anglo-Saxons, and Normans have all had a share in forming the present nomenclature. Many names have been changed to such an extent that their original form is no longer recognisable, as is shown by the examples, and some words of different origin and meaning have become identical in form. In such cases the true derivation of a name can frequently be ascertained only by finding its earlier forms in old records. When the name appears to contain the appellation of some permanent natural object, such as a hill or any part of it, a river, or ford, mistakes may often be avoided by seeing whether such an object occurs on the map in the neighbourhood of the place.

ABBREVIATIONS—A.N., Anglo-Norman; A.S., Anglo-Saxon; C.S., Celto-Saxon; Scand., Scandinavian.

NOTE.—The initial consonant of a Welsh word often changes in composition. Thus Pont becomes Bont in Pen-y-Bont, Cor becomes Gor in Bangor, and Cader Gader in Pen-y-Gader. Gaelic words are subject to similar changes.

REFERENCE MAPS OF THE BRITISH ISLES

NOTE.—A series of Statistical and Special Maps forms a supplement to the Survey Gazetteer, but it is obviously beyond the scope of this work to supply adequate Maps for topographical reference. For the convenience of those wishing such detailed Maps, we give the following summary of the best for general use.

THE ORDNANCE SURVEY is the basis of all reliable Maps of the British Isles, and its various publications constitute a complete and authoritative series of Topographical Reference Maps for all parts of the country. The Survey Maps are published on various scales, commencing as large as 10 feet, 5 feet, and 25 inches to a mile for town plans; but for the whole country the most useful and best known Maps are on the scales of six inches to a mile and one inch to a mile, as follows:—

Scale—1 : 10,560, or Six Inches to a Mile.—A complete Survey of the United Kingdom, published in several thousand sheets. This is the standard Survey Map, and the scale is large enough to show all topographical detail, including every house and cottage, every field and path.

Scale—1 : 63,360, or One Inch to a Mile.—This is the best known, and for topographical purposes, the most generally useful Map published by the Ordnance Survey. It is complete for the United Kingdom in 696 sheets.

Complete catalogues of the Ordnance Survey Maps may be had on application to the various agents.

ADMIRALTY CHARTS show the Marine or Hydrographical Survey of British Seas, Coasts, and Harbours. They indicate all the necessary guides for navigation, with information as to soundings, anchorages, sandbanks, rocks. tides, &c. For the coasts of the British Isles there are no less than 400 charts published by the Hydrographic Office of the Admiralty.

BARTHOLOMEW'S REDUCED SURVEY MAPS

For general reference purposes these Maps contain all the essential features of the one inch to a mile Survey Maps. They are reduced by permission from the Ordnance Maps. Carefully revised to date, and published in a convenient form, they are generally acknowledged to be the best Maps for popular use.

ENGLAND AND WALES

Scale—Half an Inch to the Mile

Complete in 37 sheets, as in Index Map. Each sheet measures about 20 × 30 inches.

This Map is an exact reduction of the Ordnance Survey, and shows the whole country in topographical detail. Each edition, before going to press, is submitted to local authorities for systematic revision. It shows all railways and roads, together with villages and hamlets; the principal mansion-houses, hotels, and inns. The land is coloured according to contour lines of altitude, thus showing at a glance the height of land all over the country. Driving and cycling roads are coloured brown, and the quality of road is also indicated.

Any sheet of the Map may be had separately, in a case, at price of 1s., or 2s. mounted on Cloth.

REFERENCE MAPS OF THE BRITISH ISLES

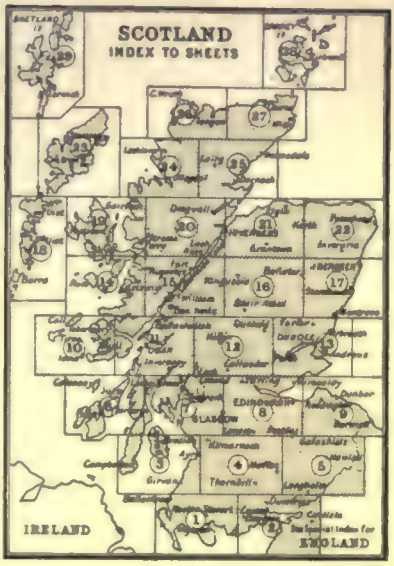
BARTHOLOMEW'S MAP OF SCOTLAND

Scale—Half an Inch to the Mile

Complete in 29 sheets, as in Index Map. Each sheet measures about 20 × 25 inches.

This Map is uniform with that of England and Wales on the same scale. It shows the same topographical detail, and is also coloured according to contour lines of altitude. In addition to the revision of roads, railways, and steamer routes, special attention has been devoted to showing all fishing streams, lochs, woods, and golf courses. In the Map of Scotland all the Parishes are shown.

Any sheet of the Map may be had separately, in a case, at price of 1s., or 2s. mounted on Cloth.



BARTHOLOMEW'S MAP OF IRELAND

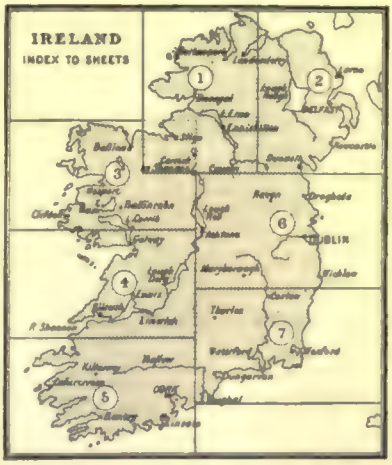
Scale—Four Miles to an Inch

Complete in 7 sheets, as in Index Map. Each sheet measures about 20 × 25 inches.

This Map, although on a smaller scale than the Maps of England and Scotland, is a careful reduction of the Ordnance Survey in minute detail.

The scale is sufficiently large to show all important topographical features, driving and cycling roads, villages and hamlets, mansion-houses and hotels, fishing streams and lochs. The land is also coloured to show elevation according to contour lines.

Any sheet of the Map may be had separately, in a case, at price of 1s., or 2s. mounted on Cloth.



GEOLOGICAL MAPS.—The standard Geological Maps of the country are issued by the Geological Survey Office. The mining districts are mapped on the large scale of six inches to a mile. The whole of England and Wales, the greater part of Scotland, and parts of Ireland, are published on the one-inch scale, while a quarter-inch Map is also issued for England and Wales, and in progress for Scotland and Ireland.

A complete catalogue of the Geological Survey Maps may be had on application to the agents.

For general reference purposes the following Maps, reduced from the Geological Survey, edited by the late Director-General, with explanatory text, and issued by Bartholomew's Geographical Institute, will be found very complete :—

Geological England and Wales, by Sir Archibald Geikie.	Scale—10 miles to an inch,	Price	12s. 6d. on Cloth.
Geological Scotland	do.	do.	Price 7s. 6d. on Cloth.
Geological Ireland	do.	do.	Price 7s. 6d. on Cloth.

TOWN PLANS AND ESTATE PLANS.—The Ordnance Survey on the six-inch and twenty-five inch to the mile scales is most generally used for Plans of towns and estates. For many towns special Plans are published annually by local authorities. Bartholomew's Series of Tourist Maps includes Plans of all the principal towns, and these are revised to date before publication of each edition.
